

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

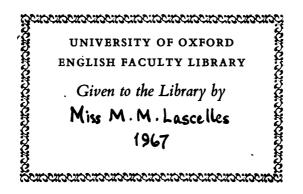

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

SINCE this Work was printed off, the Publisher having been informed that the Author, some years ago, had promised the Laird of Rasay, to correct, in a suture edition, a passage concerning him, p. 133, thinks it a justice due to that Gentleman to infert here the Advertisement relative to this matter, which was published, by Dr. Johnson's desire, in the Edinburgh Newsf. papers in the year 1775, and which has been lately reprinted in Mr. Boswell's Tour to the Hebrides:

"The Authour of the Journey to the Weftern Iflands, having related that the Macleods of Rafay acknowledge the chieftain/hip, or fuperiority, of the Macleods of Sky, finds that he has been mifinformed or miftaken. He means in a future edition to correct his errour, and wifkes to be told of more, if more have been difcovered,"

JOURNEY

SCOTLAND.

I HAD defired to vifit the Hebrides, or Western Islands of Scotland, so long, that I scarcely remember how the wish was originally excited; and was, in the Autumn of the year 1773, induced to undertake the journey, by finding in Mr. Boswell a companion, whose acuteness would help my inquiry, and whose gaiety of conversation and civility of manners are sufficient to B counteract counteract the inconveniencies of travel, in countries less hospitable than we have passed.

On the eighteenth of August we left Edinburgh, a city too well known to admit description, and directed our course northward, along the eastern coast of Scotland, accompanied the first day by another gentleman, who could stay with us only long enough to show much we lost at separation.

As we croffed the Frith of Forth, our curiofity was attracted by Inch Keith, a fmall ifland, which neither of my companions had ever vifited, though, lying within their view, it had all their lives folicited their notice. Here, by climbing with fome difficulty over fhattered crags, we made the first experiment of unfrequented coafts. Inch Keith is nothing thore than a rock covered with a thim layer layer of earth, nor wholly bare of grafs, and very fertile of thiftles. A fmall herd of cows grazes annually upon it in the fummer. It feems never to have afforded to man or beaft a permanent habitation.

We found only the ruins of a fmall fort, not to injured by time but that it might be eafily reftored to its former state. It feems never to have been intended as a place of ftrength, nor was built to endure a fiege, but merely to afford cover to a few foldiers, who perhaps had the charge of a battery, or were stationed to give fignals of approaching danger. There is therefore no provision of water within the walls, though the fpring is fo near, that it might have been eafily enclosed. One of the ftones had this infcription : "Maria Reg. " 1564." It has probably been neglected from the time that the whole island had the fame king.

We

We left this little island with our thoughts employed awhile on the different appearance that it would have made, if it had been placed at the fame distance from London, with the fame facility of approach; with what emulation of price a few rocky acres would have been purchased, and with what expensive industry they would have been cultivated and adorned.

When we landed, we found our chaife ready, and paffed through Kingborn, Kirkaldy, and Cowpar, places not unlike the fmall or ftraggling market-towns in those parts of England where commerce and manufactures have not yet produced opulence.

Though we were yet in the most populous part of Scotland, and at fo fmall a distance from the capital, we met few pasfengers.

The

The roads are neither rough nor dirty; and it affords a fouthern ftranger a new kind of pleafure to travel fo commodioufly without the interruption of toll-gates. Where the bottom is rocky, as it feems commonly to be in Scotland, a fmooth way is made-indeed with great labour, but it never wants repairs; and in those parts where adventitious materials are neceffary, the ground once confolidated is rarely broken; for the inland commerce is not great, nor are heavy commodities often transported otherwise than by water. The carriages in common use are fmall carts, drawn each by one little horfe; and a man feems to derive fome degree of dignity and importance from the reputation of poffeffing a two-horfe cart.

ST. ANDREWS.

At an hour fomewhat late we came to St. Andrews, a city once archiepifcopal; B 3 where where that university still sublists in which philosophy was formerly taught by Buchanan, whose name has as fair a claim to immortality as can be conferred by modern latinity, and perhaps a fairer than the infability of vernacular languages admits.

We found, that by the interpolition of fome invilible friend, lodgings had been provided for us at the houle of one of the profeffors, whole eafy civility quickly made us forget that we were firangers; and in the whole time of our flay we were gratified by every mode of kindnels, and entertained with all the elegance of lettered holpitality.

In the morning we role to perambulate a city, which only hiftory fhews to have once flourifhed, and furveyed the ruins of ancient magnificence, of which even the suins cannot long be visible, unless fome care be taken to preferve them; and where is is the pleafure of preferving fuch mournful memorials? They have been till very lately fo much neglected, that every man carried away the flones who fancied that he wanted them.

The cathedral, of which the foundations may be still traced, and a small part of the wall is standing, appears to have been a fpacious and majeflick building, not unfuitable to the primacy of the kingdom. Of the architecture, the poor remains can hardly exhibit, even to an artift, a fufficient specimen. It was demolished, as is well known, in the tumult and violence of Knox's reformation.

Not far from the cathedral, on the margin of the water, stands a fragment of the caftle, in which the archbishop anciently refided. It was never very large, and was built with more attention to fecurity than pleasure. Cardinal Beatoun is faid to have had had workmen employed in improving its fortifications at the time when he was murdered by the ruffians of reformation, in the manner of which Knox has given what he himfelf calls a merry narrative.

The change of religion in Scotland, eager and vehement as it was, raifed an epidemical enthusiafm, compounded of fullen scrupulousnels and warlike ferocity, which, in a people whom idlenefs refigned to their own thoughts, and who converfing only with each other, fuffered no dilution of their zeal from the gradual influx of new opinions, was long transmitted in its full ftrength from the old to the young, but by trade and intercourfe with England, is now visibly abating, and giving way too fast to that laxity of practice and indifference of opinion, in which men, not fufficiently instructed to find the middle point, too eafily shelter themselves from rigour and constraint.

The

The city of St. Andrews, when it had loft its archiepifcopal pre-eminence, gradually decayed: One of its ftreets is now loft; and in those that remain there is the filence and folitude of inactive indigence and gloomy depopulation.

The university, within a few years, confifted of three colleges, but is now reduced to two; the college of St. Leonard being lately diffolved by the fale of its buildings and the appropriation of its revenues to the professors of the two others. The chapel of the alienated college is yet flanding, a fabrick not inelegant of external ftructure; but I was always, by fome civil excufe, hindered from entering it. A decent attempt, as I was fince told, has been made to convert it into a kind of green-house, by planting its area with fhrubs. This new method of gardening is unfucceffful; the plants do not hitherto prosper. To what use it will next be put, I have no pleafure pleasure in conjecturing. It is something, that its present state is at least not oftentationally displayed. Where there is yet shame, there may in time be virtue.

The diffolution of St. Leonard's College was doubtlefs neceffary; but of that neceffity there is reafon to complain. It is furely not without juft reproach, that a nation, of which the commerce is hourly extending, and the wealth increafing, denies any participation of its prosperity to its literary focieties; and while its merchants or its nobles are raifing palaces, fuffers its universities to moulder into duft.

Of the two colleges yet flanding, one is by the inflitution of its founder appropriated to Divinity. It is faid to be capable of containing fifty fludents; but more than one must occupy a chamber. The library, which is of late erection, is not very spacious, but elegant and luminous, The

The doctor, by whom it was shewn, hoped to irritate or subdue my English vanity, by telling me, that we had no such repository of books in England.

St. Andrews feems to be a place eminently adapted to fludy and education, being fituated in a populous, yet a cheap country, and exposing the minds and manners of young men neither to the levity and diffoluteness of a capital city, nor to the gross luxury of a town of commerce, places naturally unpropitious to learning; in one the defire of knowledge easily gives way to the love of pleasure, and in the other, is in danger of yielding to the love af money.

The fludents however are represented as at this time not exceeding a hundred. Perhaps it may be fome obftruction to their increase that there is no episcopal chapel in the place. I faw no reason reason for imputing their paucity to the prefent profess; nor can the expence of an academical education be very reasonably objected. A student of the highest class may keep his annual session, or as the English call it, his term, which lasts seven months, for about state pounds, and one of lower rank for less than ten; in which, board, lodging, and instruction are all included.

The chief magistrate refident in the university, answering to our vice-chancellor, and to the rector magnificus on the continent, had commonly the title of Lord Rector; but being addressed only as Mr. Rector in an inauguratory speech by the present chancellor, he has fallen from his former dignity of style. Lordship was very liberally annexed by our ancessors to any station or character of dignity: They said, the Lord General, and Lord Ambassador; fo we still fay, my Lord, to the judge upon the circuit, circuit, and yet retain in our Liturgy the Lords of the Council.

In walking among the ruins of religious buildings, we came to two vaults over which had formerly flood the house of the fub-prior. One of the vaults was inhabited by an old woman, who claimed the right of abode there, as the widow of a man whole ancestors had posseled the fame gloomy manfion for no lefs than four generations. The right, however it began, was confidered as established by legal prefcription, and the old woman lives undifturbed. She thinks however that the has a claim to fomething more than fuffer-ance; for as her hulband's name was Bruce, fhe is allied to royalty, and told Mr. Bofwell that when there were perfons of quality in the place, the was diffinguished by fome notice; that indeed fhe is now neglected, but the fpins a thread, has the company company of her cat, and is troublefome to nobody.

Having now seen whatever this ancient city offered to our curiosity, we left it with good wishes, having reason to be highly pleased with the attention that was paid us. But whoever surveys the world must see many things that give him pain. The kindness of the professors did not contribute to abate the uneasy remembrance of an university declining, a college alienated, and a church profaned and hastening to the ground.

St. Andrews indeed has formerly fuffered more atrocious ravages and more extensive destruction, but recent evils affect with greater force. We were reconciled to the fight of archiepiscopal ruins. The diftance of a calamity from the present time feems to preclude the mind from contact or or fympathy. Events long paft are barely known; they are not confidered. We read with as little emotion the violence of Knox and his followers, as the irruptions of Alaric and the Goths. Had the university been deftroyed two centuries ago, we should not have regretted it; but to fee it pining in decay and struggling for life, fills the mind with mournful images and ineffecrual wishes.

ABERBROTHICK.

As we knew forrow and wiftes to be vain, it was now our bufinefs to mind our way. The roads of Scotland afford little diversion to the traveller, who feldom sees himself either encountered or overtaken, and who has nothing to contemplate but grounds that have no visible boundaries, or are separated by walls of loose stone. From the bank of the Tweed to St. Andrews drews I had never feen a fingle trees which I did not believe to have grown up far within the present century. Now and then about a gentleman's house stands. a fmall plantation, which in Scotch is called a policy, but of these there are few, and those few all very young. The variety of fun and shade is here utterly unknown. There is no tree for either shelter or timber. The oak and the thorn is equally a ftranger, and the whole country is extended in uniform nakedness, except that in the road between Kirkaldy and Cowpar, I paffed for a few yards between two hedges. A tree might be a flow in Scotland as a horfe in Venice. At St. Andrews Mr. Bofwell found only one, and recommended it to my notice; I told him that it was rough and low, or looked as if I thought fo. This, faid he, is nothing to another a few miles off. I was ftill lefs delighted to hear that another tree was not to be feen nearer. Nay, faid a gentleman gentleman that flood by, I know but of this and that tree in the county.

The Lowlands of Scotland had once undoubtedly an equal portion of woods with other countries, Forests are every where gradually diminished, as architecture and eultivation prevail by the increase of people and the introduction of arts. But I believe few regions have been denuded like this, where many centuries must liave passed in waste without the least thought of future supply. Davies observes in his account of Ireland, that no Irifhman had ever planted an orchard. For that negligence some excuse might be drawn from an unfettled state of life, and the instability of property; but in Scotland poffeffiont has long been fecure, and inheritance regular, yet it may be doubted whether before the Union any man between Edinburgh and England had ever fet a tree.

Of this improvidence no other account can be given than that it probably began in times of tumult, and continued because it had begun. Eftablished custom is not eafily broken, till fome great event shakes the whole fystem of things, and life feems to recommence upon new principles. That before the Union the Scots had little trade and little money, is no valid apology; for plantation is the leaft expensive of all methods of improvement. To drop a feed into the ground can coft nothing, and the trouble is not great of protecting the young plant, till it is out of danger; though it must be allowed to have fome difficulty in places like thefe, where they have neither wood for palifades, nor thorns for hedges.

Our way was over the Firth of Tay, where, though the water was not wide, we paid four shillings for ferrying the chaise. In Scotland the necessaries of life are easily procured, procured, but fuperfluities and elegancies are of the fame price at leaft as in England, and therefore may be confidered as much dearer.

We stopped a while at Dundee, where I remember nothing remarkable, and mounting our chaise again, came about the close of the day to Aberbrothick.

The monaftery of Aberbrothick is of great: renown in the hiftory of Scotland. Its ruins afford ample testimony of its ancient magnificence: Its extent might, I suppose, easily be found by following the walls among the grass and weeds, and its height is known by fome parts yet standing. The arch of one of the gates is entire, and of another only so far dilapidated as to diversify the appearance. A sufficient of great lostines is yet standing; its use I could not conjecture, as its elevation was very disproportionate C_2 to to its area. Two corner towers particularly attracted our attention. Mr. Bofwell, whole inquilitivenels is feconded by great activity, fcrambled in at a high window, but found the flairs within broken, and could not reach the top. Of the other tower we were told that the inhabitants fometimes climbed it, but we did not immediately difcern the entrance, and as the night was gathering upon us, thought proper to defift. Men skilled in architecture might do what we did not attempt: They might probably form an exact groundplot of this venerable edifice. They may from fome parts yet standing conjecture its general form, and perhaps by comparing it with other buildings of the fame kind and the fame age, attain an idea very near to truth. I should scarcely have regretted my journey, had it afforded nothing more than the fight of Aberbrothick.

Leaving these fragments of magnificence, we travelled on to Montrose, which we furveyed in the morning, and found it well built, airy, and clean. The town-house is a handsome fabrick with a portico. We then went to view the English chapel, and found a small church, clean to a degree unknown in any other part of Scotland, with commodious galleries, and what was yet lefs expected, with an organ.

At our infn we did not find a reception fuch as we thought proportionate to the commercial opulence of the place; but Mr. Bofwell defired me to observe that the innkeeper was an Englishman, and I then defended him as well as I could.

When I had proceeded thus far, I had opportunities of obferving what I had ne-C 3 ver ver heard, that there were many beggars in Scotland. In Edinburgh the proportion is, I think, not lefs than in London, and in the smaller places it is far greater than in English towns of the same extent. It must, however, be allowed that they are not importunate, nor clamorous. They folicit filently, or very modeftly, and therefore though their behaviour may ftrike with more force the heart of a ftranger, they are certainly in danger of miffing the attention of their countrymen. Novelty has always fome power, an unaccuftomed mode of begging excites an unaccuftomed degree of pity. But the force of novelty is by its own nature foon at an end; the efficacy of outcry and perfeverance is permanent and certain.

The road from Montrole exhibited a continuation of the fame appearances. The country is still naked, the hedges are of stone, and the fields fo generally plowed that that it is hard to imagine where grafs is found for the horfes that till them. The harvest, which was almost ripe, appeared very plentiful.

Early in the afternoon Mr. Bofwell obr ferved that we were at no great diffance from the house of Lord Monboddo. The magnetism of his conversation easily drew us out of our way, and the entertainment which we received would have been a sufficient recompence for a much greater deviation.

The roads beyond Edinburgh, as they are lefs frequented, must be expected to grow gradually rougher; but they were hitherto by no means incommodious. We travelled on with the gentle pace of a Scotch driver, who having no rivals in expedition, neither gives himself nor his horses unnecessary trouble. We did not affect the impatience we did not feel, but C 4 were were fatisfied with the company of each other as well riding in the chaife, as fitting at an inn. The night and the day are equally folitary and equally fafe; for where there are fo few travellers, why fhould there he robbers?

ABERDEEN.

We came fomewhat late to Aberdeen, and found the inn fo full, that we had fome difficulty in obtaining admiffion, till Mr. Bofwell made himfelf known: His name overpowered all objection, and we found a very good house and civil treatment.

I received the next day a very kind letter from Sir Alexander Gordon, whom I had formerly known in London, and after a ceffation of all intercourfe for near twenty years met here professor of physic in the King's College. Such unexpected 3 renewals renewals of acquaintance may be numbered among the most pleasing incidents of life.

The knowledge of one professor soon procured me the notice of the reft, and I did not want any token of regard, being conducted wherever there was any thing which I defired to fee, and entertained at once with the novelty of the place; and the kindness of communication.

To write of the cities of our own island with the folemnity of geographical defeription, as if we had been caft upon a newly difcovered coaft, has the appearance of very frivolous oftentation; yet as Scotland is little known to the greater part of those who may read these observations, it is not superfluous to relate, that under the name of Aberdeen are comprised two towns standing about a mile diftant from each other,

other, but governed, I think, by the fame magistrates.

Old Aberdeen is the ancient epifcopal city, in which are still to be feen the remains of the cathedral. It has the appearance of a town in decay, having been situated in times when commerce was yet unstudied, with very little attention to the commodities of the harbour.

New Aberdeen has all the buftle of profperous trade, and all the flow of increafing opulence. It is built by the waterfide. The houfes are large and lofty, and the ftreets fpacious and clean. They build almost wholly with the granite used in the new pavement of the ftreets of London, which is well known not to want hardness, yet they fhape it eafily. It is beautiful and must be very lasting.

What

What particular parts of commerce are chiefly exercised by the merchants of Aberdeen, I have not inquired. The manufacture which forces itself upon a stranger's eye is that of knit-stockings, on which the women of the lower class are visibly employed.

In each of these towns there is a college, or in stricter language, an univerfity; for in both there are professions of the same parts of learning, and the colleges hold their sessions and confer degrees segmented with total independence of one on the other.

In Old Aberdeen stands the King's College, of which the first president was Hector Boece, or Boethius, who may be justly reverenced one of the revivers of elegant learning. When he studied at Paris, he was acquainted with Erasmus, who afterwards gave him a publick testimony of his his effeem, by inferibing to him a catalogue of his works. The ftyle of Boethius, though, perhaps, not always rigoroully pure, is formed with great diligence upon ancient models, and wholly uninfected with monastic barbarity. His history is written with elegance and vigour, but his fabulousness and credulity are justly blamed. His fabuloufnefs, if he was the author of the fictions, is a fault for which no apology can be made; but his credulity may be excufed in an age, when all men were credulous. Learning was then rifing on the world; but ages fo long accustomed to darknefs, were too much dazzled with its light to fee any thing diffinctly. The first race of scholars in the fifteenth century, and fome time after, were, for the most part, learning to speak, rather than to think, and were therefore more fludious of elegance than of truth. The contemporaries of Boethius thought it fufficient to know what the ancients had delivered: The WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 29 The examination of tenets and of facts was referved for another generation.

Boethius, as prefident of the university. enjoyed a revenue of forty Scottish marks, about two pounds four shillings and fixpence of sterling money. In the present age of trade and taxes, it is difficult even for the imagination fo to raife the value of money, or fo to diminish the demands of life, as to suppose four and forty shillings a year, an honourable flipend; yet it was probably equal, not only to the needs, but to the rank of Boethius. The wealth of England was undoubtedly to that of Scotland more than five to one, and it is known that Henry the Eighth, among whole faults avarice was never reckoned, granted to Roger Afcham, as a reward of his learning, a penfion of 10 pounds a year. .

The other, called the Marifchal College, is in the new town. The hall is large and well lighted.

lighted. One of its ornaments is the picture of Arthur Johnston; who was principal of the college, and who holds among the Latin poets of Scotland the next place to the elegant Buchanan.

In the library I was fliewn fome curiofities; a Hebrew manuscript of exquisite penmanship, and a Latin translation of Aristotle's Politicks by Leonardus Aretinus, written in the Roman character with nicety. and beauty, which, as the art of printing. has made them no longer necessary, are not now to be found. This was one of the latest performances of the transcribers, for Aretinus died but about twenty years before typography was invented. This verfion has been printed, and may be found in librariés, but is little read; for the same books have been fince translated both by Victorius and Lambinus, who lived in an age more cultivated; but perhaps owed in part part to Aretinus that they were able to excel him. Much is due to those who first broke the way to knowledge, and lest only to their successors the task of smoothing it.

In both these colleges the methods of inftruction are nearly the fame; the lectures differing only by the accidental difference. of diligence, or ability in the professors. The fludents-wear scarlet gowns and the professors black, which is, I believe, the academical dress in all the Scottifh univerfities, except that of Edinburgh, where the scholars are not diffinguished by any: particular habit. In the King's College. there is kept'a publick table, but the fcholars of the Marischal College are boarded: in the town. The expence of living is here, according to the information that I could obtain, fomewhat more than at St. Andrews.

The

The course of education is extended to four years; at the end of which those who take a degree, who are not many, become masters of arts, and whoever is a master. may, if he pleafes, immediately commence: doctor. The title of doctor, however, was for a confiderable time bestowed only on phyficians. The advocates are examined: and approved by their own body; the ministers were not ambitious of titles, or wereafraid of being centured for ambition; and the doctorate in every faculty was commonly given or fold into other countries. The ministers are now reconciled to diffinetion, and as it mult always happen that fome will excel others, have thought graduation a proper teltimony of uncommon abilities or acquisitions.

The indifcriminate collation of degrees: has juftly taken away that refpect which they originally claimed as ftamps, by which the literary value of men fo diftinguished was was authoritatively denoted. That academical honours, or any others, should be conferred with exact proportion to merite is more than human judgment or human integrity have given reafon to expect. Perhaps degrees in universities cannot be better adjusted by any general rule, than by the length of time paffed in the public profession of learning. An English or Irish doctorate cannot be obtained by a very young man, and it is reafonable to fuppofe, what is likewife by experience commonly found true, that he who is by age qualified to be a doctor, has in fo much time gained learning fufficient not to difgrace the title, or wit fufficient not to defire it.

The Scotch universities hold but one term or session in the year. That of St. Andrews continues eight months, that of Aberdeen only five, from the first of November to the first of April.

In Aberdeen there is an English chapel, in which the congregation was numerous and splendid. The form of public worship used by the church of England is in Scotland legally practised in licensed chapels, ferved by clergymen of English or Irish ordination, and by tacit connivance quietly permitted in separate congregations supplied with ministers by the successfors of the bishops who were deprived at the Revolution.

We came to Aberdeen on Saturday August 21. On Monday we were invited into the town-hall, where I had the freedom of the city given me by the Lord Provost. The honour conferred had all the decorations that politeness could add, and what I am afraid I should not have had to fay of any city south of the Tweed, I found no petty officer bowing for a fee.

The

The parchment containing the record of admiffion, is with the feal appending, fastened to a riband, and worn for one day by the new citizen in his hat.

By a lady who faw us at the chapel, the Earl of Errol was informed of our arrival, and we had the honour of an invitation to his feat, called Slanes Caftle, as I am told, improperly, from the caftle of that name, which once flood at a place not far diffant.

The road beyond Aberdeen grew more flony, and continued equally naked of all vegetable decoration. We travelled over a tract of ground near the fea, which, not long ago, fuffered a very uncommon and unexpected calamity. The fand of the fhore was raifed by a tempeft in fuch quantities, and carried to fuch a diftance, that an effate was overwhelmed and loft. Such and fo hopelefs was the barrennefs fuperinduced, that the owner, when he was re-D a quired quired to pay the ufual tax, defired rather to refign the ground.

SLANES CASTLE. THE BULLER OF BUCHAN.

We came in the afternoon to Slanes Caftle, built upon the margin of the fea, fo that the walls of one of the towers feem only a continuation of a perpendicular rock, the foot of which is beaten by the waves. To walk round the house feemed impracticable, From the windows the eye wanders over the fea that feparates Scotland from Norway, and when the winds beat with violence, must enjoy all the terrifick grandeur of the tempestuous ocean. I would not for my amufement with for a ftorm; but as ftorm's, whether wished or not, will fometimes happen, I may fay without violation of humanity, that I fhould willingly look out upon them from Slanes Caffle.

When we were about to take our leave, our departure was prohibited by the Gountefs, till we fhould have feen two places upon the coaft, which the rightly confidered as worthy of curiofity, Dun Buy, and the Buller of Bueban, to which Mr. Boyd very kindly conducted us.

Dun Buy, which in Erfe is faid to fignify the Yellow-Reck, is a double protuberance of ftone, open to the main fga on one fide, and parted from the land by a very narrow channel on the otheral It has its name and its colour from the dung of innumerable fea fowls, which in the Spring chuse this place as convenient for incubation, and have their eggs and their young taken in great abundance... One of the birds that frequent this rock has, as we were told, its body not larger than a duck's, and yet lays eggs as large as those of a goofe. This bird is by the inha-D 3 bitants bitants named a Coot. That which is called Coot in England, is here a Cooter.

Upon these rocks there was nothing that could long detain attention, and we foon turned our eyes to the Buller, or Bouilloir of Buchan, which no man can fee with indifference, who has either fense of danger or delight in rarity. It is a rock perpendicularly tubulated, united on one fide with a high fhore, and on the other riling steep to a great height, above the main fea. The top is open, from which may be feen a dark gulf of water which flows into the 'cavity, through a breach 'made in the lower part of the inclosing rock. It has the appearance of a vaft well bordered with a wall. The edge of the Buller is not wide, and to those that walk round, appears very narrow. He that ventures to look downward fees, that if his foot should flip, he must fall from his dreadful elevation water on the other. We however went round, and were glad when the circuit was / completed.

When we came down to the fea, we faw fome boats, and rowers, and refolved to explore the Buller, at the Bottom. We entered the arch, which the water had made, and found ourfelves in a place, which, though we could not think ourfelves in danger, we could fcarcely furvey without fome recoil of the mind. The bason in which we floated was nearly circular, perhaps thirty yards in diameter. We were inclosed by a natural wall, rising freep on every fide to a height which produced the idea of infurmountable confinement. The interception of all lateral light caufed a difmal gloom. Round us was a perpendicular rock, above us the diftant sky, and below an unknown profundity of water. If I had any malice against a walking spi-D 4 rit.

rit, instead of laying him: in the Red-lea, I. would condemn him to refide in the Bullet of Buchan.

But terrour without danger is only one of the fports of fancy, a voluntary agitation of the mind that is permitted no longer than it pleases. We were foon at leifure to examine the place with minute in2 spection, and found many cavities which, a's the watermen told us, went backward to a depth which they had never explored. Their extent we had not time to try; they are faid to ferve different purpofes. Ladies -come hither fometimes in the fummer with collations, and imugglers make them florehoules for clandestine merchandise. It is hardly to be doubted but the pirates of ancient times often used them as magazines of arms, or repolitories of plunder.

To the little veffels used by the northern rowers, the Buller may have ferved as a shelter shelter from storms, and perhaps as a retreat from enemies; the entrance might have been stopped, or guarded with little difficulty, and though the vessels that were stationed within would have been battered with stones showered on them from above, yet the crews would have lain state in the caverns.

Next morning we continued our journey, pleafed with our reception at Slanes Caftle, of which we had now leifure to recount the grandeur and the elegance; for our way afforded us few topics of converfation. The ground was neither uncultivated nor unfruitful; but it was ftill all arable. Of flocks or herds there was no appearance. I had now travelled two hundred miles in Scotland, and feen only one tree not younger than myfelf.

BAMFF.

BAMFF.

We dined this day at the house of Mr. Frazer of Streichton, who shewed as in his grounds fome stones yet standing of a druidical circle, and what I began to think more worthy of notice, some forest trees of full growth.

At night we came to Bamff, where I remember nothing that particularly claimed my attention. The ancient towns of Scotland have generally an appearance unufual to Englifhmen. The houfes, whether great or fmall, are for the moft part built of ftones. Their ends are now and then next the ftreets, and the entrance into them is very often by a flight of fteps, which reaches up to the fecond ftory. The floor which is level with the ground, being entered only by ftairs defcending within the houfe.

The art of joining squares of glass with lead is little used in Scotland, and in fome places is totally forgotten. The frames of their windows are all of wood. They are more frugal of their glafs than the English, and will often, in houles not otherwife mean, compose a square of two pieces, not joining like cracked glass, but with one edge laid perhaps half an inch over the other. Their windows do not move upon hinges, but are pushed up and drawn down in grooves, yet they are feldom accommodated with weights and pullies. He that would have his window open muft hold it with his hand, unless what may be fometimes found among good contrivers. there be a nail which he may flick into a hole, to keep it from falling.

What cannot be done without fome uncommon trouble or particular expedient, will not often be done at all. The incommodioufnefs of the Scotch windows keeps 4 them them very closely shut. The necessity of ventilating human habitations has not yet been found by our northern neighbours; and even in houses well built and elegantly furnished, a stranger may be sometimes forgiven, if he allows himself to with for fresher air,

These diminutive observations seem to take away fomething from the dignity of writing, and therefore are never communicated but with hefitation, and a little fear of abasement and contempt. But it must be remembered, that life confifts not of a feries of illustrious actions, or elegant enjoyments; the greater part of our time passes in compliance with necessities, in the performance of daily duties, in the removal of fmall inconveniencies, in the procurement of petty pleasures; and we are well or ill at ease, as the main stream of life glides on fmoothly, or is ruffled by fmall obstacles and frequent interruption, The

The true state of every nation is the state of common life. The manners of a people are not to be found in the schools of learning, or the palaces of greatness, where the national character is obscured or obliterated by travel or inftruction, by philofophy or vanity; nor is public happines to be estimated by the assemblies of the gay. or the banquets of the rich. The great mass of nations is neither rich nor gay: they whole aggregate conflitutes the people, are found in the fireets, and the villages, in the shops and farms; and from them collectively confidered, must the measure of general profperity be taken. As they approach to delicacy a nation is refined, as their conveniencies are multiplied, a nation, at least a commercial nation, must be denominated wealthy.

ELGIN.

ELGIN.

Finding nothing to detain us at Bamff; we fet out in the morning, and having breakfasted at Cullen, about noon came to Elgin, where in the inn, that we supposed the best, a dinner was set before us, which we could not eat. This was the first time; and except one; the last, that I found any reafon to complain of a Scottish table; and such disappointments, I suppose; must be expected in every country, where there is no great frequency of travellers.

The ruins of the cathedral of Elgin afforded us another proof of the waste of reformation. There is enough yet remaining to shew, that it was once magnificent. Its whole plot is easily traced. On the north fide of the choir, the chapterhouse, which is roofed with an arch of shone, remains entire; and on the south fide, another mass of building, which we could could not enter, is preferved by the care of the family of Gordon; but the body of the church is a mais of fragments.

A paper was here put into our hands, which deduced from sufficient authorities the hiftory of this venerable ruin. The church of Elgin had, in the inteffine tumults of the barbarous ages, been laid wafte by the irruption of a highland chief, whom the bishop had offended a but it was gradually reflored to the flafe, of which the traces may be now difcerned. and was at last not destroyed by the tumultuous violence of Knox, but more fhamefully fuffered to dilapidate by deliberate robbery and frigid indifference. There is still extant, in the books of the - council, an order, of which I cannot remember the date, but which was doubtlefs iffued after the reformation, directing that the lead, which covers the two cathedrals of Elgin and Aberdeen, shall be taken away, away, and converted into money for the fupport of the army. A Scotch army was in those times very cheaply kept; yet the lead of two churches must have born so finall a proportion to any military expence, that it is hard not to believe the reason alleged to be merely popular, and the money intended for some private purse. The order however was obeyed; the two churches were stripped, and the lead was schipped to be fold in Holland. I hope every reader will rejoice that this cargo of facrilege was lost at fea.

Let us not however make too much hafte to defpife our neighbours. Our own cathedrals are mouldering by unregarded dilapidation. It feems to be part of the defpicable philofophy of the time to defpife monuments of facred magnificence, and we are in danger of doing that deliberately, which the Scots did not do but in the unfettled ftate of an imperfect conflictution.

Thofe

Those who had once uncovered the cathedrais never withed to cover them again: and being thus made useless, they were first neglected, and perbaps, as the stone was wanted, afterwards demolished.

Elgin feems a place of little trade, and thinly inhabited. The epifcopal cities of Scotland, I believe, generally fell with their churches, though fome of them have fince recovered by a fituation convenient for commerce. Thus Glafgow, though it has no longer an archbidhop, has rifen beyond its original flate by the opulence of its traders; and Aberdeen, though its ancient flock had decayed, flouristes by a new fhoot in another place.

In the chief freet of Elgin, the houfes jut over the lowest flory, like the old buildings of timber in London, but with greater prominence; fo that there is formetimes a walk for a confiderable length E under under a cloifter, or portico, which is now indeed frequently broken, because the new houses have another form, but seems to have been uniformly continued in the old city.

FORES. CALDER. FORT GEORGE.

We went forwards the fame day to Fores, the town to which Macbeth was travelling, when he met the weird fifters in his way. This to an Englishman is classic ground. Our imaginations were heated, and our thoughts recalled to their old amufements.

We had now a prelude to the Highlands. We began to leave fertility and culture behind us, and faw for a great length of road nothing but heath; yet at Fochabars, a feat belonging to the duke of Gordon, there is an orchard, which in Scotland

Scotland I had never feen before, with fome timber trees, and a plantation of oaks.

At Fores we found good accommodation, but nothing worthy of particular remark, and next morning entered upon the road, on which Macbeth heard the fatal prediction; but we travelled on not interrupted by promifes of kingdoms, and came to Nairn, a royal burgh, which, if once it flourished, is now in a state of miserable decay; but I know not whether its chief annual magistrate has not still the title of Lord Provost.

At Nairn we may fix the verge of the Highlands; for here I first faw peat fires, and first heard the Erfe language. We had no motive to stay longer than to breakfast, and went forward to the house of Mr. Macaulay, the minister who published an account of St. Kilda, and by his direction visited Calder Castle, from which E_2 Macbeth

Matbeth drew his fecond title. It has been formerly a place of ftrength. The draw-bridge is ftill to be feen, but the moat is now dry. The tower is very ancient. Its walls are of great thickfields, arched on the top with flone, and furrounded with battlements. The reft of the house is later, though far from modern.

We were favoured by a gentleman, who lives in the caftle, with a letter to one of the officers at Fort George, which being the most regular fortification in the illand, well deferves the notice of a traveller, who has never travelled before. We went thither next day, found a very kind reception, were led round the works by a gentleman, who explained the use of every part, and entertained by Sir Eyre Coose, the governor, with such elegance of conversation as left us no attention to the delicacies of his table.

Of

Of Fort George I shall not attempt to give any account. I cannot delineate it scientifically, and a loose and popular defription is of use only when the imagination is to be amused. There was everywhere an appearance of the utmost neataes and regularity. But my suffrage is of little value, because this and Fort Augustus are the only garrisons that I ever faw.

We did not regret the time spent at the fort, though in consequence of our delay we came somewhat late to Inverness, the town which may properly be called the capital of the Highlands. Hither the inhabitants of the inland parts come to be supplied with what they cannot make for themselves: Hither the young nymphs of the mountains and valleys are sent for education, and as far as my observation has reached, are not sent in vain.

INVERNESS.

Invernefs was the laft place which had a regular communication by high roads with the fouthern counties. All the ways beyond it have, I believe, been made by the foldiers in this century. At Invernefs therefore Cromwell, when he fubdued Scotland, flationed a garrifon, as at the boundary of the Highlands. The foldiers feem to have incorporated afterwards with the inhabitants, and to have peopled the place with an Englifh race; for the language of this town has been long confidered as peculiarly elegant.

Here is a caftle, called the caftle of Macbeth, the walls of which are yet ftanding. It was no very capacious edifice, but ftands upon a rock fo high and fleep, that I think it was once not acceffible, but by the help of ladders, or a bridge. Over againft against it, on another hill, was a fort built by Cromwell, now totally demolifhed; for no faction of Scotland loved the name of Cromwell, or had any defire to continue his memory.

Yet what the Romans did to other nations, was in a great degree done by Cromwell to the Scots; he civilized them by conquest, and introduced by useful violence the arts of peace. I was told at Aberdeen that the people learned from Cromwell's foldiers to make fhoes and to plant kail.

How they lived without kail, it is not eafy to guess: They cultivate hardly any other plant for common tables, and when they had not kail they probably had nothing. The numbers that go barefoot are fill fufficient to shew that shoes may be fpared; they are not yet confidered as neceffaries of life; for tall boys, not otherwife wife meanly dreffed, run without them in the ftreets and in the illands; the fons of gentlemen pals feveral of their first years with naked feet.

I know not whether it be not peculiar to the Scots to have attained the liberal, without the manual arts, to have excelled in ornamental knowledge, and to have wanted not only the elegancies, but the conveniencies of common life. Literature, foon after its revival, found its way to Scotland, and from the middle of the fixteenth century, almost to the middle of the feventeenth, the politer fludies were very diligently purfued. The Latin poetry of Delicize Poëtarum Scotorum would have done honour to any nation, at least till the publication of May's Supplement the Englifh had very little to oppose.

Yet men thus ingenious and inquisitive were content to live in total ignorance of the

the trades by which human wants are fupplied, and to fupply them by the groffeff means. Till the Union made them acquainted with English manners, the culture of their lands was unskilful, and their domettick life unformed; their tables were coarfe as the feasts of Eskimeaux, and their houses filthy as the cottages of Hottentots.

Since they have known that their condition was capable of improvement, their progrefs in ufeful knowledge has been rapid and uniform. What remains to be done they will quickly do, and then wonder, like me, why that which was fo neceffary and fo eafy was fo long delayed. But they must be for ever content to owe to the English that elegance and culture, which, if they had been vigilant and active, perhaps the English might have owed to them.

Here the appearance of life began to alter. I had feen a few women with plaids at Aberdeen; but at Invernefs the Highland manners are common. There is I think a kirk, in which only the Erfe language is ufed. There is likewife an Englifh chapel, but meanly built, where on Sunday we faw a very decent congregation.

We were now to bid farewell to the luxury of travelling, and to enter a country upon which perhaps no wheel has ever rolled. We could indeed have used our post-chaise one day longer, along the military road to Fort Augustus, but we could have hired no horse beyond Inverness, and we were not so seven Inverness, as to lead them, merely that we might have one day longer the indulgence of a carriage.

At Inverness therefore we procured three horses for ourselves and a servant, and one more more for our baggage, which was no very heavy load. We found in the course of our journey the convenience of having disencumbered ourselves, by laying aside whatever we could spare; for it is not to be imagined without experience, how in climbing crags, and treading bogs, and winding through narrow and obstructed passages, a little bulk will hinder, and a little weight will burden; or how often a man that has pleased himself at home with his own resolution, will, in the hour of darkness and fatigue, be content to leave behind him every thing but himself.

LOUGH NESS.

We took two Highlanders to run befide us, partly to fhew us the way, and partly to take back from the fea-fide the horfes, of which they were the owners. One of them was a man of great livelinefs and activity, of whom his companion faid, that that he would tire any horfe in Invernefs. Both of them were civil and ready-handed. Civility feems part of the national character of Highlanders. Every chieftain is a monarch, and politenefs, the natural product of royal government, is diffufed from the laird through the whole clan. But they are not commonly dextrous: their marrownefs of life confines them to a few operations, and they are accuftomed to endure little wants more than to remove them.

We mounted our steeds on the thirteenth of August, and directed our guides to conduct us to Fort Augustus. It is built at the head of Lough Ness, of which Invernefs stands at the outlet. The way between them has been cut by the foldiers, and the greater part of it runs along a rock, levelled with great labour and exactness, near the water-fide.

Moft

-Most of this day's journey was very pleafant. The day, though bright, was not hot ; 'and the appearance of the country, if I had not feen the Peak, would have been wholly new. We went upon a furface to hard and level, that we had little care to hold the bridle, and were therefore at full leifure for contemplation. On the left were high and fleep rocks fhaded with birch, the hardy native of the North, and covered with fern or heath. On the right the limpid waters of Lough Nefs were beating their bank, and waving their furface by argentle agitation. Beyond them were rocks fometimes covered with verdure, and fometimes towering in horrid askednefs. Now and then we expied a little corn-field, which ferved to imprefs more firongly the general barronness.

Lough Nels is about twenty-four miles long, and from one mile to two miles broad. It is remarkable that Boethius, in his de*fcription*

fcription of Scotland, gives it twelve miles of breadth. When hiftorians or geographers exhibit falle accounts of places far diftant, they may be forgiven, becaufe they can tell but what they are told; and that their accounts exceed the truth may be juftly fuppofed, becaufe moft men exaggerate to others, if not to themfelves: but Boetbius lived at no great diftance; if he never faw the lake, he muft have been very incurious, and if he had feen it, his veracity yielded to very flight temptations.

Lough Ne/s, though not twelve miles broad, is a very remarkable diffusion of water without islands. It fills a large hollow between two ridges of high rocks, being supplied partly by the torrents which fall into it on either fide, and partly, as is supposed, by springs at the bottom. Its water it remarkably clear and pleasant, and is imagined by the natives to be medicinal. We were told, that it is in some places a hundred hundred and forty fathom deep, a profundity fcarcely credible, and which probably those that relate it have never founded. Its fish are falmon, trout, and pike.

It was faid at Fort Augustus, that Lough Nefs is open in the hardeft winters, though a lake not far from it is covered with ice. In discuffing these exceptions from the course of nature, the first question is, whether the fact be justly stated. That which is strange is delightful, and a pleasing error is not willingly detected. Accuracy of narration is not very common, and there are few to rigidly philosophical, as not to represent as perpetual, what is only frequent, or as constant, what is really casual. If it be true that Lough Nels never freezes, it is either sheltered by its high banks from the cold blafts, and exposed only to those winds which have more power to agitate than congeal; or it is kept in perpetual motion by the ruth of ftreams from the rocks rocks that include it. Its profundity, though it should be such as is represented, can have little part in this exemption; for though deep wells are not frozen, because their water is secuded from the external air, yet where a wide surface is exposed to the full influence of a freezing atmosphere, I know not why the depth should keep it open. Natural philosophy is now one of the favourite studies of the Scottish nation, and Lough Nels well deserves to be diligently examined.

The road on which we travelled, and which was itfelf a fource of entertainment, is made along the rock, in the direction of the lough, fometimes by breaking off propuberances, and fometimes by cutting the great mais of from to a confiderable depth. The fragments are piled in a loofe wall on either fide, with apertures left at very thort spates, provide a pallage to the winney currents: Part of it is bordered with low e 1 trees, from which our guides gathered nuts, and would have had the appearance of an English lane, except that an English lane is almost always dirty. It has been made with great labour, but has this advantage, that it cannot, without equal labour, be broken up.

Within our fight there were goats feeding or playing. The mountains have red deer, but they came not within view; and if what is faid of their vigilance and fubtlety be true, they have fome claim to that palm of wifdom, which the eaftern philofopher, whom Alexander interrogated, gave to those beafts which live furthest from men.

Near the way, by the water fide, we espied a cottage. This was the first Highland Hut that I had seen; and as our business was with life and manners, we were willing to visit it. To enter a habitation without leave, seems to be not confidered F here here as rudeness or intrusion. The old laws of hospitality still give this licence to a stranger.

A hut is confiructed with loofe flones. ranged for the most part with some tendency to circularity. It must be placed where the wind cannot act upon it with violence, because it has no cement; and where the water will run eafily away, becaufe it has no floor but the naked ground. The wall, which is commonly about fix feet high, declines from the perpendicular a little inward. Such rafters as can be procured are then raifed for a roof, and covered with heath, which makes a ftrong and warm thatch, kept from flying off by ropes of twifted heath, of which the ends, reaching from the centre of the thatch to the top of the wall, are held firm by the weight of a large flone. No light is admitted but at the entrance, and through a hole in the thatch, which gives vent to the fmoke. This hole is not directly over the fire, fire, left the rain should extinguish it; and the smoke therefore naturally fills the place before it escapes. Such is the general structure of the houses in which one of the nations of this opulent and powerful island has been hitherto content to live. Huts however are not more uniform than palaces; and this which we were inspecting was very far from one of the meaness, for it was divided into several apartments; and its inhabitants possible fuch property as a passed apartment poet might exalt into riches.

When we entered, we found an old woman boiling goats-flefh in a kettle. She fpoke little Englifh, but we had interpreters at hand; and fhe was willing enough to difplay her whole fyftem of economy. She has five children, of which none are yet gone from her. The eldeft, a boy of thirteen, and her hufband, who is eighty years old, were at work in the wood. Her two next fons were gone to F_2 Invernefs

Invernefs to buy meal, by which oatmeal is always meant. Meal fhe confidered as expensive food, and told us, that in Spring when the goats gave milk, the children could live without it. She is mistrefs of fixty goats, and I faw many kids in an enclosure at the end of her house. She had also fome poultry. By the lake we faw a potatoe-garden, and a small spot of ground on which should four shucks, containing each twelve sheaves of barley. She has all this from the labour of their own hands, and for what is necessary to be bought, her kids and her chickens are fent to market.

With the true paftoral hospitality, she asked us to fit down and drink whisky. She is religious, and though the kirk is four miles off, probably eight English miles, she goes thither every Sunday. We gave her a shilling, and she begged sources for source for source the second second second tage.

Soon.

Soon afterwards we came to the General's Hut, fo called because it was the temporary abode of Wade, while he superintended the works upon the road. It is now a house of entertainment for passengers, and we found it not ill stocked with provisions.

FALL OF FIERS.

Towards evening we croffed by a bridge, the river which makes the celebrated fall of Fiers. The country at the bridge firikes the imagination with all the gloom and grandeur of Siberian folitude. The way makes a flexure, and the mountains, covered with trees, rife at once on the left hand and in the front. We defired our guides to fhew us the fall, and difmounting 'clambered over very rugged craggs, till I began to wifh that our curiofity might have been gratified with lefs trouble and danger. We came at laft to a place where we could overlook the river, and faw a channel torn, as it feems, through black piles of flone, by which the flream is obftructed and broken, till it comes to a very fleep defcent, of fuch dreadful depth, that we were naturally inclined to turn afide our eyes.

But we visited the place at an unseasonable time, and found it divested of its dignity and terror. Nature never gives every thing at once. A long continuance of dry weather, which made the reft of the way eafy and delightful, deprived us of the pleafure expected from the fall of Fiers. The river having now no water but what the fprings fupply, flowed us only a fwift current, clear and fhallow, fretting over the afperities of the rocky bottom, and we were left to exercise our thoughts, by endeavouring to conceive the, effect of a thousand streams poured from the mountains into one channel, ftruggling for expansion in a narrow passage, exalperated by rocks rifing in their way, and at last discharging all their violence of waters by a sudden fall through the horrid chasm.

The way now grew lefs eafy, defcending by an uneven declivity, but without either dirt or danger. We did not arrive at Fort Augustus till it was late. Mr. Bofwell, who, between his father's merit and his own. is fure of reception wherever he comes. fent a fervant before to beg admission and entertainment for that night. Mr. Trapaud, the governor, treated us with that courtefy which is fo clofely connected with the military character. He came out to meet us beyond the gates, and apologized that, at fo late an hour, the rules of a garrifon fuffered him to give us entrance only at the postern.

FORT AUGUSTUS.

In the morning we viewed the fort, which is much lefs than that of St. George, and is faid to be commanded by the neighbouring hills. It was not long ago taken by the Highlanders. But its fituation feems well chofen for pleafure, if not for ftrength; it ftands at the head of the lake, and, by a floop of fixty tuns, is fupplied from Invernefs with great convenience.

We were now to crofs the Highlands towards the western coast, and to content ourselves with such accommodations; as a way fo little frequented could afford. The journey was not formidable, for it was but of two days, very unequally divided, becaufe the only houfe, where we could be entertained, was not further off than a third of the way. We foon came to a high hill, which we mounted by a military road, cut in traverses, fo that as we went upon a higher ftage, we faw the baggage following us below in a contrary direction. To make this way, the rock has been hewn to a level with labour that might have broken

WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 73 broken the perfeverance of a Roman legion.

The country is totally denuded of its wood, but the flumps both of oaks and ' firs, which are flill found, fhew that it has been once a foreft of large timber. I do not remember that we faw any animals, but we were told that, in the mountains, there are ftags, roebucks, goats, and rabbits.

We did not perceive that this tract was poffeffed by human beings, except that once we faw a corn-field, in which a lady was walking with fome gentlemen. Their house was certainly at no great distance, but so fituated that we could not descry it.

Paffing on through the drearine's of folitude, we found a party of foldiers from the fort, working on the road, under the fuperintendence of a ferjeant. We told them them how kindly we had been treated at the garrifon, and as we were enjoying the benefit of their labours, begged leave to thew our gratitude by a fmall prefent.

ANOCH.

Early in the afternoon we came to Anoch, a village in Glenmollifon of three huts, one of which is diffinguished by a chimney. Here we were to dine and lodge, and were conducted through the first room, that had the chimney, into another lighted by a fmall glass window. The landlord attended us with great civility, and told us what he could give us to eat and drink. I found fome books on a shelf, among which were a volume or more of Prideaux's Connection.

This I mentioned as fomething unexpected, and perceived that I did not pleafe him. I praifed the propriety of his language, WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 75 guage, and was answered that I need not wonder, for he had learned it by grammar.

By subsequent opportunities of observation I found that my hoft's diction had nothing peculiar. Those Highlanders that can fpeak English, commonly speak it well, with few of the words, and little of the tone by which a Scotchman is diffinguished. Their language feems to have been learned in the army or the navy, or by fome communication with those who could give them good examples of accent and pronunciation. By their Lowland neighbours they would not willingly be taught; for they have long confidered them as a mean and degenerate race. These prejudices are wearing fast away; but so much of them still remains, that when I asked a very learned minister in the islands, which they confidered as their most favage clans: " Thole, faid he, that live next the Low-" lands."

• As we came hither early in the day, we had time fufficient to furvey the place. The house was built like other huts of loofe flones, but the part in which we dined and flept was lined with turf and wattled with twigs, which kept the earth from falling. Near it was a garden of turnips and a field of potatoes. It flands in a glen, or valley, pleafantly watered by a winding river. But this country, however it may delight the gazer or amufe the naturalist, is of no great advantage to its owners. Our landlord told us of a gentleman, who poffesse lands, eighteen Scotch miles in length, and three in breadth; a fpace containing at leaft a hundred square English miles. He has raifed his rents to the danger of depopulating his farms, and he fells his timber, and by exerting every art of augmentation, has obtained an yearly revenue of four hundred pounds, which for a hundred

WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 77 hundred fquare miles is three half-pence an acre,

Some time after dinner we were furprifed by the entrance of a young woman, not inelegant either in mien or drefs, who afked us whether we would have tea. We found that fhe was the daughter of our hoft, and defired her to make it. Her conversation, like her appearance, was gentle and pleafing. We knew that the girls of the Highlands are all gentlewomen, and treated her with great respect, which she received as customary and due, and was neither elated by it, nor confused, but repaid my civilities without embarrasfiment, and told me how much I honoured her country by coming to furvey it.

She had been at Invernefs to gain the common female qualifications, and had, like her father, the English pronunciation. I presented her with a book, which I happened pened to have about me, and should not be pleased to think that she forgets me.

In the evening the foldiers, whom we had passed on the road, came to spend at our inn the little money that we had given them. They had the true military impatience of coin in their pockets, and had marched at least fix miles to find the first place where liquor could be bought. Having never been before in a place fo wild and unfrequented, I was glad of their arrival, becaufe I knew that we had made them friends, and to gain ftill more of their good will, we went to them, where they were caroufing in the barn, and added fomething to our former gift. All that we gave was not much, but it detained them in the barn, either merry or quarrelling, the whole night, and in the morning they went back to their work, with great indignation at the bad qualities of whifky.

We had gained to much the favour of our hoft, that when we left his houfe in the morning, he walked by us a great way, and entertained us with convertation both on his own condition, and that is the country. His life feemed to be merely partoral, except that he differed from fome of the ancient Nomades in having a fettled dwelling. His wealth confifts of one hundred theep, as many goats, twelve milkcows, and twenty-eight beeves ready for the drovers.

From him we first heard of the general diffatisfaction, which is now driving the Highlanders into the other homifphere; and when I asked him whether they would stay at home, if they were well treated, he answered with indignation, that no man willingly left his native country. Of the farm, which he himself occupied, the rent had, in twenty-five years, been advanced from five to twenty pounds, which he found found himself so little able to pay, that he would be glad to try his fortune in some other place. Yet he owned the reasonableness of raising the Highland rents in a certain degree, and declared himself willing to pay ten pounds for the ground which he had formerly had for five.

Our hoft having amufed us for a time, refigned us to our guides. The journey of this day was long, not that the diftance was great, but that the way was difficult. We were now in the bofom of the Highlands, with full leifure to contemplate the appearance and properties of mountainous regions, fuch as have been, in many countries, the laft shelters of national diftres, and are every where the scenes of adventures, firatagems, surprises, and escapes.

Mountainous countries are not paffed but with difficulty, not merely from the labour labour of climbing; for to climb is not always neceffary: but becaufe that which is not mountain is commonly bog, through which the way muft be picked with caution. Where there are hills, there is much rain, and the torrents pouring down into the intermediate fpaces, feldom find fo ready an outlet, as not to ftagnate till they have broken the texture of the ground.

Of the hills, which our journey offered to the view on either fide, we did not take the height, nor did we fee any that aftonifhed us with their loftinefs. Towards the fummit of one, there was a white fpot, which I fhould have called a naked rock, but the guides, who had better eyes, and were acquainted with the phænomena of the country, declared it to be fnow. It had already lafted to the end of August, and was likely to maintain its contest with the fun, till it should be reinforced by winter.

The

The height of mountains philosophically confidered is properly computed from the furface of the next fea; but as it affects the eye or imagination of the paffenger, as it makes either a fpectacle or an obstruction, it must be reckoned from the place where the rife begins to make a confiderable angle with the plain. In extensive continents the land may, by gradual elevation, attain great height, without any other appearance than that of a plane gently inclined, and if a hill placed upon fuch raifed ground be defcribed, as having its altitude equal to the whole fpace above the fea, the reprefentation will be fallacious.

These mountains may be properly enough measured from the inland base; for it is not much above the sea. As we advanced at evening towards the western coast, I did not observe the declivity to be greater than

WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 83 than is necessary for the discharge of the inland waters.

We passed many rivers and rivulets, which commonly ran with a clear shallow stream over a hard pebbly bottom. These channels, which seem so much wider than the water that they convey would naturally require, are formed by the violence of wintry floods, produced by the accumulation of innumerable streams that fall in rainy weather from the hills, and bursting away with resistles impetuosity, make themselves a passe proportionate to their mass.

Such capricious and temporary waters cannot be expected to produce many fifh. The rapidity of the wintry deluge fweeps them away, and the fcantine's of the fummer ftream would hardly fuftain them above the ground. This is the reafon why G 2 in in fording the northern rivers, no fifthes are feen, as in England, wandering in the water.

Of the hills many may be called with Homer's Ida abundant in springs, but few can deferve the epithet which he bestows upon Pelion by waving their leaves. They exhibit very little variety; being almost wholly covered with dark heath, and even that feems to be checked in its growth. What is not heath is nakedness, a little diversified by now and then a stream rushing down the fteep. An eye accustomed to flowery paftures and waving harvefts is aftonished and repelled by this wide extent of hopeless fterility. The appearance is that of matter incapable of form or usefulness, dismissed by nature from her care and difinherited of her favours, left in its original elemental state, or quickened only with one fullen power of useless vegetation.

It

It will very readily occur, that this uniformity of barrenness can afford very little amusement to the traveller; that it is easy to fit at home and conceive rocks and heath, and waterfalls; and that these journeys are useles labours, which neither impregnate the imagination, nor enlarge the underftanding. It is true that of far the greater part of things, we must content ourfelves with fuch knowledge as defcription may exhibit, or analogy fupply; but it is true likewife, that these ideas are always incomplete, and that at leaft, till we have compared them with realities, we do not know them to be just. As we fee more, we became possessed of more certainties, and confequently gain more principles of reasoning, and found a wider bafis of analogy,

Regions mountainous and wild, thinly inhabited, and little cultivated, make a G 3 great great part of the earth, and he that has never feen them, must live unacquainted with much of the face of nature, and with one of the great feenes of human exiftence.

As the day advanced towards noon, we entered a narrow valley not very flowery, but fufficiently verdant. Our guides told us, that the horfes could not travel all day without reft or meat, and entreated us to flop here, becaufe no grafs would be found in any other place. The requeft was reafonable and the argument cogent. We therefore willingly difmounted and diverted ourfelves as the place gave us opportunity.

I fat down on a bank, fuch as a writer of Romance might have delighted to feign. I had indeed no trees to whilper over my head, but a clear rivulet ftreamed at my my feet. The day was calm, the air foft, and all was rudenefs, filence, and folitude. Before me, and on either fide, were high hills, which by hindering the eye from ranging, forced the mind to find entertainment for itfelf. Whether I fpent the hour well I know not; for here I first conceived the thought of this narration.

We were in this place at eafe and by choice, and had no evils to fuffer or to fear; yet the imaginations excited by the view of an unknown and untravelled wildernels are not fuch as arife in the artificial folitude of parks and gardens, a flattering notion of felf-fufficiency, a placid indulgence of voluntary delufions, a fecure expansion of the fancy, or a cool concentration of the mental powers. The phantoms which haunt a defert are want, and misery, and danger; the evils of dereliction rush upon the thoughts; man is G_4 made made unwillingly acquainted with his own weaknefs, and meditation fhews him only how little he can fuftain, and how little he can perform. There were no traces of inhabitants, except perhaps a rude pile of clods called a fummer hut, in which a herdiman had refted in the favourable feafons. Whoever had been in the place where I then fat, unprovided with provisions and ignorant of the country, might, at least before the roads were made, have wandered among the rocks, till he had perished with hardship, before he could have found either food or shelter. Yet what are thefe hillocks to the ridges of Taurus, or these spots of wildness to the defarts of America?

It was not long before we were invited to mount, and continued our journey along the fide of a lough, kept full by many ftreams, which with more or lefs rapidity and noife croffed the road from the hills on

on the other hand. These currents, in their diminished state, after several dry months, afford, to one who has always lived in level countries, an unusual and delightful spectacle; but in the rainy seafon, such as every winter may be expected to bring, must precipitate an impetuous and tremendous flood. I suppose the way by which we went, is at that time impassible.

GLENSHEALS.

The lough at last ended in a river broad and shallow like the rest, but that it may be passed when it is deeper, there is a bridge over it. Beyond it is a valley called Glensbeals, inhabited by the clan of Macrae. Here we found a village called Auknasbeals, consisting of many huts, perhaps twenty, built all of dry-stone, that is, stones piled up without mortar.

We

We had, by the direction of the officera at Fort Augustus, taken bread for ourselves. and tobacco for those Highlanders who might shew us any kindness. We were now at a place where we could obtain milk, but must have wanted bread if we had not brought it. The people of this valley did not appear to know any English, and our guides now became doubly neceffary as interpreters. A woman, whole hut was diftinguished by greater spaciousness and better architecture, brought out fome pails of milk. The villagers gathered about us in confiderable numbers, I believe without any evil intention, but with a very favage wildness of aspect and manner. When our meal was over, Mr. Bofwell fliced the bread, and divided it amongst them, as he fupposed them never to have tasted a wheaten loaf before. He then gave them little pieces of twifted tobacco, and among the children we distributed a small handful of halfpence, which they received with great great eagerness. Yet I have been fince told, that the people of that valley are not indigent; and when we mentioned them afterwards as needy and pitiable, a Highland lady let us know, that we might fpare our commiseration; for the dame. whose milk we drank had probably more than a dozen milk cows. She feemed unwilling to take any price, but being preffed to make a demand, at last named a shilling. Honefty is not greater where elegance is One of the by-standers, as we were lefs. told afterwards, advised her to ask more, but she faid a shilling was enough. We gave her half a crown, and I hope got fome credit by our behaviour; for the company faid, if our interpreters did not flatter us, that they had not feen fuch a day fince the old laird of Macleod paffed through their country.

The Macraes, as we heard afterwards in the Hebrides, were originally an indigent 1 and 1 and fubordinate clan, and having no farms nor flock, were in great numbers fervants to the Maclellans, who, in the war of Charles the First, took arms at the call of the heroic Montrofe, and were, in one of his battles, almost all destroyed. The women that were left at home, being thus deprived of their husbands, like the Scythian ladies of old, married their fervants, and the Macraes became a confiderable race.

THE HIGHLANDS.

As we continued our journey, we were at leifure to extend our fpeculations, and¹ to invefligate the reafon of those peculiarities by which fuch rugged regions as these before us are generally diffinguished.

Mountainous countries commonly contain the original, at least the oldest race of inhabitants, for they are not easily con-, quered, quered, becaufe they must be entered by narrow ways, exposed to every power of mischief from those that occupy the heights; and every new ridge is a new fortrefs, where the defendants have again the fame advantages. If the affailants either force the ftrait, or ftorm the fummit, they gain only fo much ground; their enemies are fled to take possession of the next rock, and the purfuers fland at gaze, knowing neither where the ways of escape wind among the steeps, nor where the bog has firmnels to fustain them : befides that, mountaineers have an agility in climbing and defcending diffinct from strength or courage, and attainable only by use.

If the war be not foon concluded, the invaders are diflodged by hunger; for in those anxious and toilfome marches, provisions cannot easily be carried, and are never to be found. The wealth of mountains is cattle, which, while the men stand in the passes, the women drive away. Such

Such lands at last cannot repay the expense of conquest, and therefore perhaps have not been to often invaded by the mere ambition of dominion; as by refertment of robberies and infults, or the defire of enjoying in security the more fruitful provinces.

As mountains are long before they are conquered, they are likewife long before they are civilized. Men are foftened by intercourfe mutually profitable, and inftructed by comparing their own notions with those of others. Thus Cælar found the maritime parts of Britain made lefs barbarous by their commerce with the Into a barren and rough tract no Gauls. ftranger is brought either by the hope of gain or of pleafure. The inhabitants having neither commodities for fale, nor money for purchase, seldom visit more polished places, or if they do visit them feldom return.

It

It fometimes happens that by conqueft, intermixture, or gradual refinement, the cultivated parts of a country change their language. The mountaineers then become a diftinct nation, cut off by diffimilitude of fpeech from conversation with their neighbours. Thus in Bifcay, the original Cantabrian, and in Dalecarlia, the old Swedifh ftill fubfifts. Thus Wales and the Highlands fpeak the tongue of the first inhabitants of Britain, while the other parts have received first the Saxon, and in fome degree afterwards the French, and then formed a third language between them.

That the primitive manners are continued where the primitive language is fpoken, no nation will defire me to fuppofe, for the manners of mountaineers are commonly favage, but they are rather produced by their fituation than derived from their anceftors.

Such

Such feems to be the disposition of man. that whatever makes a diffinction produces rivalry. England, before other caufes of enmity were found, was disturbed for some centuries by the contests of the northern and fouthern counties; fo that at Oxford, the peace of fludy could for a long time be preferved only by chufing annually one of the proctors from each fide of the Trent. A tract interfected by many ridges of mountains, naturally divides its inhabitants into petty nations, which are made by a thousand causes enemies to each other. Each will exalt its own chiefs, each will boast the valour of its men, or the beauty of its women, and every claim of fuperiority irritates competition; injuries will fometimes be done, and be more injurioufly defended; retaliation will fometimes be attempted, and the debt exacted with too much intereft.

In the Highlands it was a law, that if a robber was sheltered from justice, any man man of the fame clan might be taken in his place. This was a kind of irregular justice, which, though necessary in favage times, could hardly fail to end in a feud, and a feud once kindled among an idle people with no variety of purfuits to divert their thoughts, burnt on for ages either fullenly glowing in fecret mifchief, or openly blazing into public violence. Of the effects of this violent judicature, there are not wanting memorials. The cave is now to be feen to which one of the Campbells, who had injured the Macdonalds, retired with a body of his own clan. The Macdonalds required the offender, and being refused, made a fire at the mouth of the cave, by which he and his adherents were fuffocated together.

Mountaineers are warlike, becaufe by their feuds and competitions they confider themfelves as furrounded with enemies, and are always prepared to repel incursions, or to

to make them. Like the Greeks in their unpolifhed flate, defcribed by Thucydides, the Highlanders, till lately, went always armed, and carried their weapons to vifits, and to ehurch.

Mountaineers are thievish, because they are poor, and having neither manufactures nor commerce, can grow richer only by robbery. They regularly plunder their neighbours, for their neighbours are commonly their enemies; and having lost that reverence for property, by which the order of civil life is preferved, soon confider all as enemies, whom they do not reckon as friends, and think themselves licensed to invade whatever they are not obliged to protect.

• By a ftrict administration of the laws, fince the laws have been introduced into the Highlands, this disposition to thievery is very much represt. Thirty years ago no herd herd had ever been conducted through the mountains, without paying tribute in the night to fome of the clans; but cattle are now driven, and passengers travel without danger, fear, or molestation.

Among a warlike people, the quality of higheft efteem is perfonal courage, and with the oftentatious display of courage are closely connected promptitude of offence and quickness of resentment. The Highlanders, before they were disarmed, were so addicted to quarrels, that the boys used to follow any publick procession or ceremony, however festive, or however solemn, in expectation of the battle, which was fure to happen before the company disperfed.

Mountainous regions are fometimes fo remote from the feat of government, and fo difficult of access, that they are very little under the influence of the fovereign, or within the reach of national justice. Law is nothing without power; and the fentence of a distant court could not be eafily executed, nor perhaps very fafely promulgated, among men ignorantly proud and habitually violent, unconnected with the general fystem, and accustomed to reverence only their own lords. It has there+ fore been necessary to erect many particular jurifdictions, and commit the punifhment of crimes, and the decision of right to the proprietors of the country who could enforce their own decrees. It immediately appears that fuch judges will be often ignorant, and often partial; but in the immaturity of political establishments no better expedient could be found. As government advances towards perfection, provincial judicature is perhaps in every empire gradually abolished.

Those who had thus the dispensation of law, were by consequence themselves lawles.

less. Their vaffals had no shelter from outrages and oppressions; but were condemned to endure, without resistance, the caprices of wantonness, and the rage of cruelty.

In the Highlands, fome great lords had an hereditary jurifdiction over counties; and fome chieftains over their own lands; till the final conqueft of the Highlands afforded an opportunity of crushing all the locat courts, and of extending the general benefits of equal law to the low and the high, in the deepest recesses and obscureft corners.

While the chiefs had this refemblance of royalty, they had little inclination to appeal, on any queftion, to fuperior judicatures. A claim of lands between two powerful lairds was decided like a conteft for dominion between fovereign powers. They drew their forces into the field, and H_3 right right attended on the ftrongeft. This was, in ruder times, the common practice, which the kings of Scotland could feldom control.

Even fo lately as in the laft years of King William, a battle was fought at Mull Roy, on a plain a few miles to the fouth of Inverness, between the clans of Mackintofb and Macdonald of Keppoch. Col. Macdonald, the head of a fmall clan, refused to pay the dues demanded from him by Mackintofb, as his fuperior lord. They difdained the interpolition of judges and laws. and calling each his followers to maintain the dignity of the clan, fought a formal battle, in which feveral confiderable men fell on the fide of Mackintolo, without a complete victory to either. This is faid to have been the laft open war made between the clans by their own authority.

The Highland lords made treaties, and formed alliances, of which fome traces may ftill fill be found, and fome confequences fill remain as lafting evidences of petty regality. The terms of one of these confederacies were, that each should support the other in the right, or in the wrong, except against the king.

The inhabitants of mountains form diftinct races, and are careful to preferve their genealogies. Men in a small district neceffarily mingle blood by intermarriages, and combine at last into one family, with a common interest in the honour and difgrace of every individual. Then begins that union of affections, and co-operation of endeavours, that conflitute a clan. They who confider themselves as ennobled by their family, will think highly of their progenitors, and they who through fucceffive generations live always together in the fame place, will preferve local ftories and hereditary prejudices. Thus every Highlander can talk of his anceftors, and H 4 recount recount the outrages which they fuffered from the wicked inhabitants of the next valley.

Such are the effects of habitation among mountains, and fuch were the qualities of the Highlanders, while their rocks fectuded them from the reft of mankind, and kept them an unaltered and difcriminated race. They are now lofing their diffinction, and haftening to mingle with the general community.

GLENELG.

We left Auknasheals and the Macraes in the afternoon, and in the evening came to Ratiken, a high hill on which a road is cut, but fo fleep and narrow, that it is very difficult. There is now a defign of making another way round the bottom. Upon one of the precipices, my horse, weary with the fleepness of the rise, flaggered a little, and and I called in haste to the Highlander to hold him. This was the only moment of my journey, in which I thought myself endangered.

Having furmounted the hill at laft, we were told that at Glenelg, on the fea-fide, we fhould come to a houfe of lime and flate and glafs. This image of magnificence raifed our expectation. At laft we came to our inn weary and peevifh, and began to inquire for meat and beds,

Of the provisions the negative catalogue was very copious. Here was no meat, no milk, no bread, no eggs, no wine. We did not express much fatisfaction. Here however we were to ftay. Whisky we might have, and I believe at last they caught a fowl and killed it. We had fome bread, and with that we prepared ourfelves to be contented, when we had a very eminent proof of Highland hospitality. Along fome fome miles of the way, in the evening, a gentleman's fervant had kept us company on foot with very little notice on our part. He left us near Glenelg, and we thought on him no more till he came to us again, in about two hours, with a prefent from his master of rum and fugar. The man had mentioned his company, and the gentleman, whofe name, I think, is Gordon, well knowing the penury of the place, had this attention to two men, whole names perhaps he had not heard, by whom his kindness was not likely to be ever repaid, and who could be recommended to him him only by their necessities.

We were now to examine our lodging. Out of one of the beds, on which we were to repole, ftarted up, at our entrance, a man black as a Cyclops from the forge. Other circumftances of no elegant recital concurred to difguft us. We had been Irighted by a lady at Edinburgh, with difcouraging discouraging representations of Highland lodgings. Sleep, however, was necessary. Our Highlanders had at last found fome hay, with which the inn could not supply them. I directed them to bring a bundle into the room, and flept upon it in my siding coat. Mr. Boswell being more delieste, laid himself sheets with hay over and under him, and lay in linen like a gentleman,

SKY. ARMYDEL.

In the morning, September the twentieth, we found ourfelves on the edge of the fea. Having procured a boat, we difmiffed our Highlanders, whom I would recommend to the fervice of any future travellers, and were ferried over to the ifle of Sky. We landed at Armidel, where we were met on the fands by Sir Alexander Macdonald, who was at that time there with his lady, preparing to leave the illand and refide at Edinburgh.

Armidel is a neat house, built where the Macdonalds had once a feat, which was burnt in the commotions that followed the Revolution. The walled orchard, which belonged to the former house, still remains. It is well shaded by tall ass trees, of a species, as Mr. Janes the fossilist informed me, uncommonly valuable. This plantation is very properly mentioned by Dr. Campbell, in his new account of the state of Britain, and deferves attention; because it proves that the prefent nakedness of the Hebrides is not wholly the fault of nature.

As we fat at Sir Alexander's table, we were entertained, according to the ancient ufage of the North, with the melody of the bagpipe, Every thing in those countries has its history. As the bagpiper was playing, an elderly gentleman informed us, that in some remote time, the Macdonalds of Glengary having been injured, or offended by the inhabitants of Culloden, and and refolving to have justice or vengeance, came to Culloden on a Sunday, where finding their enemies at worship, they shut them up in the church, which they set on fire; and this, said he, is the tune that the piper played while they were burning.

Narrations like this, however uncertain; deferve the notice of a traveller, becaufe they are the only records of a nation that has no hiftorians, and afford the moft genuine reprefentation of the life and character of the ancient Highlanders.

Under the denomination of Highlander are comprehended in Scotland all that now fpeak the Erfe language, or retain the primitive manners, whether they live among the mountains or in the iflands; and in that fenfe I use the name, when there is not fome apparent reason for making a distinction.

In

In Sky I first observed the use of Brogues, a kind of artless thoes, flitched with thongs to loofely, that though they defend the foot from stones, they do not exclude Brogues were formerly made water. of raw hides, with the hair inwards, and fuch are perhaps fill used in rude and remote parts; but they are faid not to laft above two days. Where life is fomewhat improved, they are now made of leather tanned with oak bark, as in other places, or with the bark of birch, or roots of tormentil, a substance recommended in defect of bark, about forty years ago, to the Irish tanners, by one to whom the parliament of that kingdom voted a reward. The leather of Sky is not completely penetrated by vegetable matter, and therefore cannot be very durable.

My inquiries about brogues, gave me an early fpecimen of Highland information.

tion. One day I was told, that to make brogues was a domeftic art, which every man practifed for himfelf, and that a pair of brogues was the work of an hour. I fuppofed that the hufband made brogues as, the wife made an apron, till next day it was told me, that a brogue-maker was a, trade, and that a pair would coft half a crown. It will eafily occur that thefe reprefentations may both be true, and that, in fome places, men may buy them, and in others, make them for themfelves; but I had both the accounts in the fame houfe within two days.

Many of my fublequent inquiries upon more interesting topicks ended in the like uncertainty. He that travels in the Highlands may eafily faturate his foul with intelligence, if he will acquissce in the first account. The Highlander gives to every question an answer so prompt and peremptory, that skepticism itself is dared into filence, filence, and the mind finks before the bold reporter in unrefifting credulity; but if a fecond queftion be ventured, it breaks the enchantment; for it is immediately difcovered, that what was told fo confidently was told at hazard, and that fuch fearleffnefs of affertion was either the fport of negligence, or the refuge of ignorance.

If individuals are thus at variance with themfelves, it can be no wonder that the accounts of different men are contradictory. The traditions of an ignorant and favage people have been for ages negligently heard, and unfkilfully related. Diftant events muft have been mingled together, and the actions of one man given to another. Thefe, however, are deficiencies in ftory, for which no man is now to be cenfured. It were enough, if what there is yet opportunity of examining were accurately infpected, and juftly reprefented; but fuch is the laxity of Highland conversation, that the the inquirer is kept in continual fuspense, and by a kind of intellectual retrogradation, knows lefs as he hears more.

In the illands the plaid is rarely worn. The law by which the Highlanders have been obliged to change the form of their drefs, has, in all the places that we have visited, been universally obeyed. I have feen only one gentleman completely clothed in the ancient habit, and by him it was worn only occafionally and wantonly. The common people do not think themfelves under any legal neceffity of having coats; for they fay that the law against plaids was made by Lord Hardwicke, and was in force only for his life: but the fame poverty that made it then difficult for them to change their clothing, hinders them now from changing it again.

The fillibeg, or lower garment, is fill very common, and the bonnet almost unia I versal;

verfal; but their attire is fuch as produces, in a fufficient degree, the effect intended by the law, of abolifhing the diffimilitude of appearance between the Highlanders and the other inhabitants of Britain; and, if drefs be fuppofed to have much influence, facilitates their coalition with their fellow-fubjects.

What we have long ufed we naturally like, and therefore the Highlanders were unwilling to lay afide their plaid, which yet to an unprejudiced fpectator muft appear an incommodious and cumberfome drefs; for, hanging loofe upon the body, it muft flutter in a quick motion, or require one of the hands to keep it clofe. The Romans always laid afide the gown when they had any thing to do. It was a drefs fo unfuitable to war, that the fame word which fignified a gown fignified peace. The chief ufe of a plaid feems to be this, that they could commodioufly wrap themfelves in it, when WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 115 when they were obliged to fleep without a better cover.

In our passage from Scotland to Sky, we were wet for the first time with a shower. This was the beginning of the Highland winter, after which we were told that a fuccession of three dry days was not to be expected for many months. The winter of the Hebrides confifts of little more than rain and wind. As they are furrounded by an ocean never frozen, the blafts that come to them over the water are too much foftened to have the power of congelation. The falt loughs, or inlets of the fea, which thoot very far into the illand, never have any ice upon them, and the pools of fresh water will never bear the walker. The fnow that fometimes falls, is foon diffolved by the air, or the rain.

This is not the description of a cruel climate, yet the dark months are here a time of great diftrels; because the summer can do little more than feed itself, and winter comes with its cold and its scarcity upon families very slenderly provided.

CORIATACHAN IN SKY.

The third or fourth day after our arrival at Armidel, brought us an invitation to the ifle of Raafay, which lies eaft of Sky. It is incredible how foon the account of any event is propagated in thefe narrow countries by the love of talk, which much leifure produces, and the relief given to the mind in the penury of infular converfation by a new topick. The arrival of ftrangers at a place fo rarely vifited, excites rumour, and quickens curiofity. I know not whether we touched at any corner, where Fame had not already prepared us a reception.

To gain a commodious paffage to Raafay, it was neceffary to pafs over a large part of Sky.

We were furnished therefore with Sky. horfes and a guide. In the islands there are no roads, nor any marks by which a Aranger may find his way. The horfeman has always at his fide a native of the place, who, by purfuing game, or tending cattle, or being often employed in meffages or conduct, has learned where the ridge of the hill has breadth fufficient to allow a horfe and his rider a paffage, and where the mofs or bog is hard enough to bear them. The bogs are avoided as toilfome at least, if not unfafe, and therefore the journey is made generally from precipice to precipice; from which if the eye ventures to look down, it fees below a gloomy cavity, whence the rush of water is sometimes heard.

But there feems to be in all this more alarm than danger. The Highlander walks carefully before, and the horfe, accustomed to the ground, follows him with little deviation. Sometimes the hill is too steep for the horfeman to keep his feat, and fometimes the mofs is too tremulous to bear the double weight of horfe and man. The rider then difmounts, and all fhift as they can.

Journies made in this manner are rather tedious than long. A very few miles require feveral hours. From Armidel we came at night to Coriatachan, a houfe very pleafantly fituated between two brooks, with one of the higheft hills of the ifland behind it. It is the refidence of Mr. Mackinnon, by whom we were treated with very liberal hofpitality, among a more numerous and elegant company than it could have been fuppofed eafy to collect.

The hill behind the house we did not climb. The weather was rough, and the height and fleepness discouraged us. We were told that there is a cairne upon it. A cairne is a heap of flones thrown upon the grave grave of one eminent for dignity of birth, or fplendour of atchievements. It is faid that by digging, an urn is always found under thefe cairnes: they muft therefore have been thus piled by a people whole cuftom was to burn the dead. To pile ftones is, I believe, a northern cuftom, and to burn the body was the Roman practice; nor do I know when it was that thele two acts of fepulture were united.

The weather was next day too violent for the continuation of our journey; but we had no reason to complain of the interruption. We faw in every place, what we chiefly defired to know, the manners of the people. We had company, and, if we had chosen retirement, we might have had books.

I never was in any house of the Islands, where I did not find books in more languages than one, if I staid long enough to want them, except one from which the I 4 family family was removed. Literature is not neglected by the higher rank of the Hebridians.

It need not, I fuppose, be mentioned, that in countries fo little frequented as the Islands, there are no houses where travellers are entertained for money. He that wanders about thefe wilds, either procures recommendations to those whose habitations lie near his way, or, when night and wearinefs come upon him, takes the chance of general hospitality. If he finds only a cottage, he can expect little more than shelter; for the cottagers have little more for themfelves: but if his good fortune brings him to the refidence of a gentleman, he will be glad of a ftorm to prolong his. flay. There is, however, one inn by the fea-fide at Sconfor, in Sky, where the postoffice is kept.

At the tables where a ftranger is received, neither plenty nor delicacy is wanting, A tract tract of land fo thinly inhabited, muft have much wild-fowl; and I fcarcely remember to have feen a dinner without them. The moor-game is every where to be had. That the fea abounds with fifh, needs not be told, for it fupplies a great part of Europe. The ifle of Sky has ftags and roebucks, but no hares. They fell very numerous droves of oxen yearly to England, and 'therefore cannot be fuppofed to want beef at home. Sheep and goats are in great numbers, and they have the common domeflick fowls.

But as here is nothing to be bought, every family must kill its own meat, and roast part of it fomewhat fooner than Apicius would prefcribe. Every kind of flesh is undoubtedly excelled by the variety and emulation of English markets; but that which is not best may be yet very free from bad, and he that shall complain of his fare in in the Hebrides; has improved his delicacy more than his manhood.

Their fowls are not like those plumped for fale by the poulterers of London, but they are as good as other places commonly afford, except that the geese, by feeding in the sea, have universally a fishy rankness.

These geese feem to be of a middle race, between the wild and domestick kinds. They are so tame as to own a home, and so wild as sometimes to fly quite away.

Their native bread is made of oats, or barley. Of oatmeal they fpread very thin cakes, coarfe and hard, to which unaccuftomed palates are not eafily reconciled. The barley cakes are thicker and fofter; I began to eat them without unwillingnefs; the blacknefs of their colour raifes fome diflike, but the tafte is not difagreeable. In

In most houses there is wheat flower, with which we were fure to be treated, if we staid long enough to have it kneaded and baked. As neither yeast nor leaven are used among them, their bread of every kind is unfermented. They make only cakes, and never mould a loaf.

A man of the Hebrides, for of the women's diet I can give no account, as foon as he appears in the morning, fwallows a glafs of whifky; yet they are not a drunken race, at leaft I never was prefent at much intemperance; but no man is fo abstemious as to refuse the morning dram, which they call a fkalk.

The word whifky fignifies water, and is applied by way of eminence to ftrong water, or diffilled liquor. The fpirit drunk in the North is drawn from barley. I never tafted it, except once for experiment at the inn in Inverary, when I thought it preferable ferable to any Englifb malt brandy. It was firong, but not pungent, and was free from the empyreumatic tafte or fmell. What was the process I had no opportunity of inquiring, nor do I with to improve the art of making poison pleasant.

Not long after the dram, may be expected the breakfaft, a meal in which the Scots, whether of the lowlands or mountains, must be confessed to excel us. The tea and coffee are accompanied not only with butter, but with honey, conferves, and marmalades. If an epicure could remove by a wish, in quest of sensual gratifications, wherever he had supped he would breakfast in Scotland.

In the iflands, however, they do what I found it not very eafy to endure. They pollute the tea-table by plates piled with large flices of Chefhire cheefe, which mingles its lefs grateful odours with the fragrance of the tea.

Where

Where many queftions are to be afked, fome will be omitted. I forgot to enquire how they were fupplied with fo much exotic luxury. Perhaps the French may bring them wine for wool, and the Dutch give them tea and coffee at the fifting feafon, in exchange for fresh provision. Their trade is unconftrained; they pay no cuftoms; for there is no officer to demand them; whatever therefore is made dear only by impost, is obtained here at an eafy rate.

A dinner in the Weftern Islands differs very little from a dinner in England, except that in the place of tarts, there are always fet different preparations of milk. This part of their diet will admit fome improvement. Though they have milk, and eggs, and fugar, few of them know how to compound them in a cuftard. Their gardens afford them no great variety, but they have always fome vegetables on the table.

table. Potatoes at least are never wanting, which, though they have not known them long, are now one of the principal parts of their food. They are not of the mealy, but the viscous kind.

Their more elaborate cookery, or made difhes, an Englifhman, at the firft tafte is not likely to approve, but the culinary compolitions of every country are often fuch as become grateful to other nations only by degrees; though I have read a French author, who, in the elation of his heart, fays, that French cookery pleafes all foreigners, but foreign cookery never fatisfies a Frenchman.

Their fuppers are, like their dinners, various and plentiful. The table is always covered with elegant linen. Their plates for common use are often of that kind of manufacture which is called cream coloured, or queen's ware. They use filver 4 on on all occasions where it is common in England, nor did I ever find the spoon of horn, but in one house.

The knives are not often either very bright, or very fharp. They are indeed inftruments of which the Highlanders have not been long acquainted with the general use. They were not regularly laid on the table, before the prohibition of arms, and the change of drefs. Thirty years ago the Highlander wore his knife as a companion to his dirk or dagger, and when the company fat down to meat, the men who had knives, cut the flesh into small pieces for the women, who with their fingers conveyed it to their mouths.

There was perhaps never any change of national manners fo quick, fo great, and fo general, as that which has operated in the Highlands, by the last conquest, and the subsequent laws. We came thither too too late to fee what we expected, a people of peculiar appearance, and a fystem of antiquated life. The clans retain little now of their original character, their ferocity of temper is foftened, their military ardour is extinguished, their dignity of independence is depressed, their contempt of government fubdued, and their reverence for their chiefs abated. Of what they had before the late conquest of their country, there remain only their language and their poverty. Their language is attacked on every fide. Schools are erected, in which English only is taught, and there were lately fome who thought it reafonable to refuse them a version of the holy scriptures, that they might have no monument of their mother-tongue.

That their poverty is gradually abated, cannot be mentioned among the unpleafing confequences of fubjection. They are now acquainted with money, and the poffibility of of gain will by degrees make them induftrious. Such is the effect of the late regulations, that a longer journey than to the Highlands must be taken by him whose curiofity pants for savage virtues and barbarous grandeur.

RAASAY.

At the first intermission of the stormy weather we were informed, that the boat, which was to convey us to Raasay, attended us on the coast. We had from this time our intelligence facilitated, and our converfation enlarged, by the company of Mr. Macqueen, minister of a pariss in Sky, whose knowledge and politeness give him a title equally to kindness and respect, and who, from this time, never forsook us till we were preparing to leave Sky, and the adjacent places.

The boat was under the direction of Mr. Malcolm Macleod, a gentleman of Ra-K afay.

afay. The water was calm, and the rowers were vigorous; fo that our paffage was quick and pleafant. When we came near the ifland, we faw the laird's houfe, a neat modern fabrick, and found Mr. Macleod, the proprietor of the Ifland, with many gentlemen, expecting us on the beach. We had, as at all other places, fome difficulty in landing. The crags were irregularly broken, and a falfe ftep would have been very mifchievous.

It feemed that the rocks might, with no great labour, have been hewn almost into a regular flight of steps; and as there are no other landing places, I confidered this rugged ascent as the confequence of a form of life inured to hardships, and therefore not fludious of nice accommodations. But I know not whether, for many ages, it was not confidered as a part of military policy, to keep the country not easily acceffible. The rocks are natural fortifications, WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 131 tions, and an enemy climbing with difficulty, was eafily deftroyed by those who ftood high above him.

Our reception exceeded our expectations. We found nothing but civility, elegance, and plenty. After the usual refreshments, and the ufual conversation, the evening came upon us. The carpet was then rolled off the floor; the mufician was called, and the whole company was invited to dance, nor did ever fairies trip with greater alacrity. The general air of festivity, which predominated in this place, fo far remote from all those regions which the mind has been used to contemplate as the mansions of pleafure, ftruck the imagination with a delightful surprise, analogous to that which is felt at an unexpected emerfion from darkness into light.

When it was time to fup, the dance ceased, and fix and thirty perfons fat down K 2 to

to two tables in the fame room. After fupper the ladies fung Erfe fongs, to which I liftened as an Englifk audience to an Italian opera, delighted with the founds of words which I did not underftand.

I inquired the fubjects of the fongs, and was told of one, that it was a love fong, and of another, that it was a farewell compofed by one of the Iflanders that was going, in this epidemical fury of emigration, to feek his fortune in America. What fentiments would rife, on fuch an occafion, in the heart of one who had not been taught to lament by precedent, I fhould gladly have known; but the lady, by whom I fat, thought herfelf not equal to the work of tranflating.

Mr. Macleod is the proprietor of the islands of Raafay, Rona, and Fladda, and posseffes an extensive district in Sky. The estate has not, during four hundred years, gained gained or loft a fingle acre. He acknowledges Macleod of Dunvegan as his chief, though his anceftors have formerly difputed the pre-eminence.

One of the old Highland alliances has continued for two hundred years, and is ftill fublifting between Macleod of Raafay and Macdonald of Sky, in confequence of which, the furvivor always inherits the arms of the deceafed; a natural memorial of military friendship. At the death of the late Sir James Macdonald, his fword was delivered to the prefent laird of Raafay.

The family of Raafay confifts of the laird, the lady, three fons, and ten daughters. For the fons there is a tutor in the houfe, and the lady is faid to be very fkilful and diligent in the education of her girls. More gentleness of manners, or a more pleasing appearance of domestick society, is not found in the most polished countries.

Raafay

Ranfay is the only inhabited island in Mr. Macleod's possession. Rona and Fladda afford only pasture for cattle, of which one hundred and fixty winter in Rona, under the superintendence of a solitary herdsman.

The length of Raafay is, by computation, fifteen miles, and the breadth two. These countries have never been measured. and the computation by miles is negligent and arbitrary. We observed in travelling, that the nominal and real diffance of places had very little relation to each other, Raafay probably contains near a hundred fquare miles. It affords not much ground, notwithstanding its extent, either for tillage, or pasture; for it is rough, rocky, and barren. The cattle often perifh by falling from the precipices. It is like the other islands, I think, generally naked of shade, but it is naked by neglect; for the laird has an orchard, and very large foreft trees grow about his house. Like other hilly countries WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 135 countries it has many rivulets. One of the brooks turns a corn-mill, and at leaft one produces trouts.

In the ftreams or fresh lakes of the islands, I have never heard of any other fish than trouts and eels. The trouts, which I have seen, are not large; the colour of their flesh is tinged as in England. Of their eels I can give no account, having never tasted them; for I believe they are not considered as wholesome food.

It is not very eafy to fix the principles upon which mankind have agreed to eat fome animals, and reject others; and as the principle is not evident, it is not uniform. That which is felected as delicate in one country, is by its neighbours abhorred as loathfome. The Neapolitans lately refufed to eat potatoes in a famine. An Englifhman is not eafily perfuaded to dine on fnails with an Italian, on frogs with a K 4 Frenchman, Frenchman, or on horfe-fleih with a Tartar. The vulgar inhabitants of Sky, I know not whether of the other iflands, have not only eels, but pork and bacon in abhorrence, and accordingly I never faw a hog in the Hebrides, except one at *Dun*vegan.

Raafay has wild fowl in abundance, but neither deer, hares, nor rabbits. Why it has them not, might be afked, but that of fuch queftions there is no end. Why does any nation want what it might have? Why are not fpices transplanted to America? Why does tea continue to be brought from China? Life improves but by flow degrees, and much in every place is yet to do. Attempts have been made to raife roebucks in Raafay, but without effect. The young ones it is extremely difficult to rear, and the old can very feldom be taken alive.

Hares

Hares and rabbits might be more eafily obtained. That they have few or none of either in Sky, they impute to the ravage of the foxes, and have therefore fet, for fome years paft, a price upon their heads, which, as the number was diminifhed, has been gradually raifed, from three fhillings and fixpence to a guinea, a fum fo great in this part of the world, that, in a fhort time, Sky may be as free from foxes, as England from wolves. The fund for these rewards is a tax of fixpence in the pound, imposed by the farmers on themselves, and faid to be paid with great willingnes.

The beafts of prey in the Islands are foxes, otters, and weafels. The foxes are bigger than those of England; but the otters exceed ours in a far greater proportion. I faw one at Armidel, of a fize much beyond that which I supposed them ever to attain; and Mr. Maclean, the heir of of Col, a man of middle stature, informed me that he once shot an otter, of which the tail reached the ground, when he held up the head to a level with his own. I expected the otter to have a foot particularly formed for the art of swimming; but upon examination, I did not find it differing much from that of a spaniel. As he preys in the sea, he does little visible mischief, and is killed only for his fur. White otters are fometimes seen.

In Raafay they might have hares and rabbits, for they have no foxes. Some depredations, fuch as were never made before, have caufed a fufpicion that a fox has been lately landed in the ifland by fpite or wantonnefs. This imaginary ftranger has never yet been feen, and therefore, perhaps, the mifchief was done by fome other animal. It is not likely that a creature fo ungentle, whole head could have been fold in Sky for a guinea, fhould be kept alive only only to gratify the malice of fending him to prey upon a neighbour: and the paffage from Sky is wider than a fox would venture to fwim, unlefs he were chafed by dogs into the fea, and perhaps then his ftrength would enable him to crofs. How beafts of prey came into any iflands is not eafy to guefs. In cold countries they take advantage of hard winters, and travel over the ice: but this is a very feanty folution; for they are found where they have no difcoverable means of coming.

The corn of this island is but little. I faw the harvest of a small field. The women reaped the corn, and the men bound up the sheaves. The strokes of the solution were timed by the modulation of the harvest solution of the harsolution of the harvest solution of the harvest solution of the har-vest solution of the har-

its effects are regularity and cheerfulnefs. The ancient proceleufmatick fong, by which the rowers of gallies were animated, may be fuppofed to have been of this kind. There is now an oar-fong used by the Hebridians.

The ground of Raafay feems fitter for cattle than for corn, and of black cattle I fuppofe the number is very great. The Laird himfelf keeps a herd of four hundred, one hundred of which are annually fold. Of an extensive domain, which he holds in his own hands, he confiders the fale of cattle as repaying him the rent, and fupports the plenty of a very liberal table with the remaining product.

Raafay is fuppoled to have been very long. inhabited. On one fide of it they show caves, into which the rude nations of the first ages retreated from the weather. These dreary vaults might have had other uses. There

There is ftill a cavity near the house called the oar-cave, in which the seamen, after one of those piratical expeditions, which in rougher times was very frequent, used, as tradition tells, to hide their oars. This hollow was near the sea, that nothing so necessary might be far to be setched; and it was secret, that enemies, if they landed, could find nothing. Yet it is not very evident of what use it was to hide their oars from those, who, if they were masters of the coast, could take away their boats.

A proof much fironger of the diffance at which the first possess of this island lived from the present time, is afforded by the stone heads of arrows which are very frequently picked up. The people call them Elf-bolts, and believe that the fairies shoot them at the cattle. They nearly refemble those which Mr. Banks has lately brought from the favage countries in the Pacifick Ocean, and and must have been made by a nation to which the use of metals was unknown.

The number of this little community has never been counted by its ruler, nor have I obtained any politive account, confistent with the refult of political computation. Not many years ago, the late Laird led out one hundred men upon a military expedition. The fixth part of a people is fupposed capable of bearing arms: Raafay had therefore fix hundred inhabitants. But becaufe it is not likely, that every man able to ferve in the field would follow the fummons, or that the chief would leave his lands totally defenceles, or take away all the hands qualified for labour, let it be fupposed, that half as many might be permitted to flay at home. The whole number will then be nine hundred, or nine to a fquare mile; a degree of populoufnefs greater than those tracks of defolation can often often show. They are content with their country, and faithful to their chiefs, and yet uninfected with the fever of migration.

Near the houfe at Raafay, is a chapel unroofed and ruinous, which has long been used only as a place of burial. About the churches, in the islands, are small squares inclosed with stone, which belong to particular families, as repositories for the dead. At Raafay there is one, I think, for the proprietor, and one for some collateral house.

It is told by Martin, that at the death of the Lady of the Island, it has been here the cuftom to erect a crofs. This we found not to be true. The ftones that ftand about the chapel at a fmall diftance, fome of which perhaps have croffes cut upon them, are believed to have been not funeral monuments, but the ancient boundaries of the fanctuary or confecrated ground.

Martin

Martin was a man not illiterate: he was an inhabitant of Sky, and therefore was within reach of intelligence, and with no great difficulty might have visited the places which he undertakes to defcribe; yet with all his opportunities, he has often suffered himself to be deceived. He lived in the last century, when the chiefs of the clans - had loft little of their original influence. The mountains were yet unpenetrated, no inlet was opened to foreign novelties, and the feudal inflitutions operated upon life with their full force. He might therefore have displayed a feries of subordination and a form of government, which, in more luminous and improved regions, have been long forgotten, and have delighted his readers with many uncouth cuftoms that are now difused, and wild opinions that prevail no longer. But he probably had not knowledge of the world fufficient to qualify him for judging what would deferve or gain the attention of mankind. The

The mode of life which was familiar to himfelf, he did not fuppole unknown to others, nor imagined that he could give pleafure by telling that of which it was, in his little country, impossible to be ignorant.

What he has neglected cannot now be performed. In nations, where there is hardly the ufe of letters, what is once out of fight is loft for ever. They think but. little, and of their few thoughts, none are, wafted on the paft, in which they are neither interested by fear nor hope. Their only registers are stated observances and practical representations. For this reason an age of ignorance is an age of ceremony. Pageants, and processions, and commemorations, gradually shrink away, as better, methods come into use of recording events, and preferving rights.

It is not only in Raafay that the chapel is unroofed and ufelefs; through the few -L iflands iffands which we visited, we neither saw nor heard of any house of prayer, except in Sky, that was not in ruins. The malignant influence of Calvinism has blasted ceremony and decency together; and if the remembrance of papal superstition is obliterated, the monuments of papal piety are likewise effaced.

It has been, for many years, popular to talk of the lazy devotion of the Romifh clergy; over the fleepy lazines of men that erected churches, we may indulge our superiority with a new triumph, by comparing it with the fervid activity of those who fuffer them to fall.

Of the deftruction of churches, the decay of religion must in time be the confequence; for while the public acts of the ministry are now performed in houses, a very small number can be present; and as the greater part of the Islanders make no use of

WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 147 of books, all must necessarily live in total ignorance who want the opportunity of vocal instruction.

From these remains of ancient fanctity. which are every where to be found, it has been conjectured, that, for the laft two centuries, the inhabitants of the Islands have decreased in number. This argument, which fuppofes that the churches have been fuffered to fall, only because they were no longer neceffary, would have fome force. if the houses of worship still remaining were fufficient for the people. But fince they have now no churches at all, thefe venerable fragments do not prove the people of former times to have been more numerous, but to have been more devout. If the inhabitants were doubled with their present principles, it appears not that any provision for publick worship would be made. Where the religion of a country enforces confecrated buildings, the number L 2 of

of those buildings may be supposed to afford fome indication, however uncertain, of the populousness of the place; but where by a change of manners a nation is contented to live without them, their decay implies no diminution of inhabitants.

Some of these dilapidations are faid to be found in islands now uninhabited; but I doubt whether we can thence infer that they were ever peopled. The religion of the middle age is well known to have placed too much hope in lonely austerities. Voluntary folitude was the great art of propitiation, by which crimes were effaced, and conficience was appealed; it is therefore not unlikely, that oratories were often built in places where retirement was fure to have no difturbance.

Raafay has little that can detain a traveller, except the Laird and his family; but their power wants no auxiliaries. Such

Such a feat of hospitality, amidft the winds and waters, fills the imagination with a delightful contrariety of images. Without is the rough ocean and the rocky land, the beating billows and the howling ftorm: within is plenty and elegance, beauty and gaiety, the fong and the dance. In Raafay, if I could have found an Ulyffes, I had fancied a Pbæacia.

DUNVEGAN.

At Raafay, by good fortune, Macleod, fo the chief of the clan is called, was paying a vifit, and by him we were invited to his feat at Dunvegan. Raafay has a ftout boat, built in Norway, in which, with fix oars, he conveyed us back to Sky. We landed at Port Re, fo called, becaufe James the Fifth of Scotland, who had curiofity to vifit the Iflands, came into it. The port is made by an inlet of the fea, deep and narrow, L 3 where where a fhip lay waiting to difpeople Sky, by carrying the natives away to America.

In coafting Sky, we paffed by the cavern in which it was the cuftom, as Martin relates, to catch birds in the night, by making a fire at the entrance. This practice is difufed; for the birds, as is known often to happen, have changed their haunts.

Here we dined at a publick houfe, I believe the only inn of the ifland, and having mounted our horfes, travelled in the manner already defcribed, till we came to Kingfborougb, a place diftinguished by that name, because the King lodged here when he landed at Port Re. We were entertained with the usual hospitality by Mr. Macdonald and his lady Flora Macdonald, a name that will be mentioned in history, and if courage and fidelity be virtues, mentioned with honour. She is a woman of middle stature, fot

WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 151 foft features, gentle manners, and elegant presence.

In the morning we fent our horfes round a promontory to meet us, and spared ourfelves part of the day's fatigue, by crossing an arm of the sea. We had at last fome difficulty in coming to Dunvegan; for our way led over an extensive moor, where every step was to be taken with caution, and we were often obliged to alight, because the ground could not be trussed. In travelling this watery flat, I perceived that it had a visible declivity, and might without much expence or difficulty be drained. But difficulty and expence are relative terms, which have different meanings in different places.

To Dunvegan we came, very willing to be at reft, and found our fatigue amply recompensed by our reception. Lady Mackod, who had lived many years in England, L 4 was was newly come hither with her fon and four daughters, who knew all the arts of fouthern elegance, and all the modes of English economy. Here therefore we fettled, and did not spoil the present hour with thoughts of departure.

Dunvegan is a rocky prominence, that juts out into a bay, on the west fide of Sky. The house, which is the principal seat of Macleod, is partly old and partly modern; it is built upon the rock, and looks upon the water. It forms two fides of a fmall fquare: on the third fide is the skeleton of a caffle of unknown antiquity, supposed to have been a Norwegian fortres, when the Danes were masters of the Islands. It is fo nearly entire, that it might have eafily been made habitable, were there not an ominous tradition in the family, that the owner shall not long outlive the reparation. The grandfather of the present Laird, in defiance of prediction, began the work, but defifted WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 153 defifted in a little time, and applied his money to worfe uses.

As the inhabitants of the Hebrides lived, for many ages, in continual expectation of hostilities, the chief of every clan resided in a fortres. This house was accessible only from the water, till the last possible opened an entrance by stairs upon the land.

They had formerly reafon to be afraid, not only of declared wars and authorized invaders, or of roving pirates, which, in the northern feas, muft have been very common; but of inroads and infults from rival clans, who, in the plenitude of feudal independence, afked no leave of their Sovereign to make war on one another. Sky has been ravaged by a feud between the two mighty powers of Macdonald and Macleod. Macdonald having married a Macleod, upon fome difcontent difmiffed her, perhaps becaufe fhe had brought him no children. Before

Before the reign of James the Fifth, a Highland Laird made a trial of his wife for a certain time, and if the did not pleafe him, he was then at liberty to fend her away. This however must always have offended, and Macleod refenting the injury, whatever were its circumflances, declared, that the wedding had been folemnized without a bonfire, but that the feparation thould be better illuminated; and raifing a little army, fet fire to the territories of Macdonald, who returned the vifit, and prevailed.

Another ftory may show the diforderly ftate of infular neighbourhood. The inhabitants of the Isle of Egg, meeting a boat manned by Macleods, tied the crew hand and foot, and set them a-drift. Macleod landed upon Egg, and demanded the offenders; but the inhabitants refusing to furrender them, retreated to a cavern, into which they thought their enemies unlikely to follow them. Macleod choked them with with fmoke, and left them lying dead by families as they ftood.

Here the violence of the weather confined us for fome time, not at all to our difcontent or inconvenience. We would indeed very willingly have vifited the Iflands, which might be feen from the houfe fcattered in the fea, and I was particularly defirous to have viewed I/ay; but the ftorms did not permit us to launch a boat, and we were condemned to liften in idlenefs to the wind, except when we were better engaged by liftening to the ladies.

We had here more winds than waves, and fuffered the feverity of a tempest, without enjoying its magnificence. The sea being broken by the multitude of islands, does not roar with so much noise, nor beat the storm with such so much noise, nor beat the storm with such so much noise, as I have remarked on the coast of Suffex. Though, while I was in the Hebrides, the wind was extremely turbulent, I never faw very high billows.

The country about Dunvegan is rough and barren. There are no trees, except in the orchard, which is a low fheltered fpot furrounded with a wall.

When this houfe was intended to fuftain a fiege, a well was made in the court, by boring the rock downwards, till water was found, which though fo near to the fea, I have not heard mentioned as brackifh, though it has fome hardnefs, or other qualities, which makes it lefs fit for ufe; and the family is now better fupplied from a ftream, which runs by the rock, from two pleafing water-falls.

Here we faw fome traces of former manners, and heard fome ftanding traditions. In the houfe is kept an ox's horn, hollowed fo as to hold perhaps two quarts, which which the heir of Macleod was expected to fwallow at one draught, as a teft of his manhood, before he was permitted to bear arms, or could claim a feat among the men. It is held that the return of the Laird to Dunvegan, after any confiderable abfence, produces a plentiful capture of herrings; and that, if any woman croffes the water to the oppofite Ifland, the herrings will defert the coaft. Boetius tells the fame of fome other place. This tradition is not uniform. Some hold that no woman may pafs, and others that none may pafs but a Macleod.

Among other guests, which the hospitality of Dunvegan brought to the table, a visit was paid by the Laird and Lady of a small island south of Sky, of which the proper name is Muack, which fignifies swine. It is commonly called Muck, which the proprietor not liking, has endeavoured, without effect, to change to Monk. It is usual to call gentlemen in Scotland by the name of their possibility.

poffeffions, as Raafay, Bernera, Loch Buy, a practice neceffary in countries inhabited by clans, where all that live in the fame territory have one name, and muft be therefore difcriminated by fome addition. This gentleman, whofe name, I think, is Maclean, fhould be regularly called Muck; but the appellation, which he thinks too coarfe for his Ifland, he would like ftill lefs for himfelf, and he is therefore addreffed by the title of, Ifle of Muck.

This little island, however it be named, is of confiderable value. It is too Englift miles long, and three quarters of a mile broad, and confequently contains only nine hundred and fixty Englift acres. It is chiefly arable. Half of this little dominion the Laird retains in his own hand, and on the other half, live one hundred and fixty perfons, who pay their rent by exported corn. What rent they pay, we were not told, and could not decently inquire.

quire. The proportion of the people to the land is fuch, as the most fertile coun-. tries do not commonly maintain.

The Laird having all his people under his immediate view, feems to be very attentive to their happines. The devastation of the fmall-pox, when it visits places where it comes feldom, is well known. He has disarmed it of its terrour at Muack, by inoculating eighty of his people. The expence was two shillings and fixpence a head. Many trades they cannot have among them, but upon occasion, he fetches a fmith from the Isle of Egg, and has a tailor from the main land, fix times a year. This Island well deferved to be feen, but the Laird's absence left us no opportunity.

Every inhabited Island has its appendant and subordinate islets. Muck, however small, has yet others smaller about it, one of which has only ground sufficient to afford pafture for three wethers.

At

At Dungevan I had tafted lotus, and was in danger of forgetting that I was ever to depart, till Mr. Bofwell fagely reproached me with my fluggifhnefs and foftnefs. I had no very forcible defence to make; and we agreed to purfue our journey. Macleod accompanied us to Ulinifb, where we were entertained by the fheriff of the Ifland.

ULINISH.

Mr. Macqueen travelled with us, and directed our attention to all that was worthy of obfervation. With him we went to fee an ancient building, called a dun or borough. It was a circular inclosure, about forty two feet in diameter, walled round with loofe ftones, perhaps to the height of nine feet. The walls are very thick, diminishing a little towards the top, and though in these countries, ftone is not brought far, must have been raifed with much labour. Within the great circle were feveral leveral smaller rounds of wall, which formed diffinct apartments. Its date and its use are unknown. Some suppose it the original feat of the chiefs of the Macleods. Mr. Macqueen thought it a Danish fort.

The entrance is covered with flat flones, and is narrow, because it was necessary that the flones which lie over it, should reach from one wall to the other; yet, flrait as the passage is, they seem heavier than could have been placed where they now lie, by the naked flrength of as many men as might fland about them. They were probably raised by putting long pieces of wood under them, to which the action of a long line of listers might be applied-Savages, in all countries, have patience proportionate to their unskilfulnes, and are content to attain their end by very tedious methods.

If it was ever roofed, it might once have been a dwelling, but as there is no provi-M fion fion for water, it could not have been a In Sky, as in every other place, fortress. there is an ambition of exalting whatever has furvived memory, to fome important use, and referring it to very remote ages. I am inclined to fuspect, that in lawless times, when the inhabitants of every mountain fole the cattle of their neighbour, these enclosures were used to secure the herds and flocks in the night. When they were driven within the wall, they might be eafily watched, and defended as long as could be needful; for the robbers durft not wait till the injured clan should find them in the morning.

The interior enclosures, if the whole building were once a house, were the chambers of the chief inhabitants. If it was a place of security for cattle, they were probably the shelters of the keepers.

From the Dun we were conducted to another place of fecurity, a cave carried a great great way under ground, which had been diffeovered by digging after a fox. Thefe caves, of which many have been found, and many probably remain concealed, are formed, I believe, commonly by taking advantage of a hollow, where banks or rocks rife on either fide. If no fuch place can be found, the ground muft be cut away. The walls are made by piling ftones againft the earth, on either fide. It is then roofed by large ftones laid acrofs the cavern, which therefore cannot be wide. Over the roof, turfs were placed, and grafs was fuffered to grow; and the mouth was concealed by buffes, or fome other cover.

Thefe caves were reprefented to us as the cabins of the first rude inhabitants, of which, however, I am by no means perfuaded. This was fo low, that no man could stand upright in it. By their conftruction they are all fo narrow, that two can never pass along them together, and M 2 being being fubterraneous, they must be always damp. They are not the work of an age much ruder than the prefent; for they are formed with as much art as the construction of a common hut requires. I imagine them to have been places only of occasional use, in which the Islander, upon a sudden alarm, hid his utenfils, or his clothes, and perhaps fometimes his wife and children.

This cave we entered, but could not proceed the whole length, and went away without knowing how far it was carried. For this omiffion we fhall be blamed, as we perhaps have blamed other travellers; but the day was rainy, and the ground was damp. We had with us neither fpades nor pickaxes, and if love of eafe furmounted our defire of knowledge, the offence has not the invidioufnefs of fingularity.

Edifices, either flanding or ruined, are the chief records of an illiterate nation. In fome fome part of this journey, at no great diftance from our way, flood a fhattered fortrefs, of which the learned minister, to whose communication we are much indebted, gave us an account.

Thofe, faid he, are the walls of a place of refuge, built in the time of James the Sixth, by Hugh Macdonald, who was next heir to the dignity and fortune of his chief. Hugh, being fo near his wifh, was impatient of delay; and had art and influence fufficient to engage feveral gentlemen in a plot against the Laird's life. Something must be stipulated on both fides; for they would not dip their hands in blood merely for Hugh's advancement. The compactwas formally written, figned by the conspirators, and placed in the hands of one Macleod.

It happened that Macleod had fold fome cattle to a drover, who not having ready M 3 money, money, gave him a bond for payment. The debt was discharged, and the bond redemanded; which Macleod, who could not read, intending to put into his hands, gave him the confpiracy. The drover, when he had read the paper, delivered it privately to Macdonald, who being thus informed of his danger, called his friends together, and provided for his fafety. He made a public feast, and inviting Hugh Macdonald and his confederates, placed each of them at the table between two men of known fidelity. The compact of conspiracy was then shewn, and every man confronted with his own name. Macdonald acted with great moderation. He upbraided Hugh, both with difloyalty and ingratitude; but told the reft, that he confidered them as men deluded and mifinformed. Hugh was fworn to fidelity, and difmissed with his companions; but he was not generous enough to be reclaimed by lenity; and finding no longer any countenance

nance among the gentlemen, endeavoured to execute the fame defign by meaner hands. In this practice he was detected, taken to Macdonald's caftle, and imprifoned in the dungeon. When he was hungry, they let down a plentiful meal of falted meat; and when, after his repaft, he called for drink, conveyed to him a covered cup. which, when he lifted the lid, he found empty. From that time they vifited him no more, but left him to perifh in folitude and darknefs.

We were then told of a cavern by the fea-fide, remarkable for the powerful reverberation of founds. After dinner, we took a boat, to explore this curious cavity. The boatmen, who feemed to be of a rank above that of common drudges, inquired who the ftrangers were, and being told we came one from Scotland, and the other from England, afked if the Englifbman could recount a long genealogy. What M 4 answer was given them, the conversation being in Er/c, I was not much inclined to examine.

They expected no good event of the voyage; for one of them declared that he heard the cry of an English ghost. This omen I was not told till after our return, and therefore cannot claim the dignity of despising it.

The fea was fmooth. We never left the fhore, and came without any difafter to the cavern, which we found rugged and misshapen, about one hundred and eighty feet long, thirty wide in the broadest part, and in the loftiest, as we guessed, about thirty high. It was now dry, but at high water the fea rifes in it near fix feet. Here I faw what I had never seen before, limpets and muscles in their natural state. But, as a new testimony to the veracity of common WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 169 common fame, here was no echo to be heard.

We then walked through a natural arch in the rock, which might have pleafed us by its novelty, had the ftones, which encumbered our feet, given us leifure to confider it. We were fhown the gummy feed of the kelp, that fastens itself to a stone, from which it grows into a strong stalk.

In our return, we found a little boy upon the point of a rock, catching with his angle, a fupper for the family. We rowed up to him, and borrowed his rod, with which Mr. Bofwell caught a cuddy.

The cuddy is a fifh of which I know not the philosophical name. It is not much bigger than a gudgeon, but is of great use in these Islands, as it affords the lower people both food, and oil for their lamps. Cuddies are so abundant, at some times of the the year, that they are caught like whitebait in the Thames, only by dipping a bafket and drawing it back,

If it were always practicable to fifh, these Islands could never be in much danger from famine; but unhappily in the winter, when other provision fails, the seas are commonly too rough for nets, or boats.

TALISKER IN SKY.

From Ulinifb, our next ftage was to Talifker, the houfe of Colonel Macked, an officer in the Dutch fervice, who in this time of univerfal peace, has for feveral years been permitted to be abfent from his regiment. Having been bred to phyfick, he is confequently a fcholar, and his lady, by accompanying him in his different places of refidence, is become skilful in feveral languages. Talifker is the place beyond all that I have feen, from which the gay and the 4 jovial feem utterly excluded; and where the hermit might expect to grow old in meditation, without poffibility of diffurbance or interruption. It is fituated very near the fea, but upon a coaft where no veffel lands but when it is driven by a tempeft on the rocks. Towards the land are lofty hills ftreaming with water-falls. The garden is fheltered by firs, or pines, which grow there fo profperoufly, that fome, which the prefent inhabitant planted, are very high and thick.

At this place we very happily met Mr. Donald Maclean, a young gentleman, the eldeft fon of the Laird of Col, heir to a very great extent of land, and fo defirous of improving his inheritance, that he fpent a confiderable time among the farmers of Hertford/bire, and Hamp/bire, to learn their practice. He worked with his own hands at the principal operations of agriculture, that he might not deceive himfelf by

by a false opinion of skill, which if he should find it deficient at home, he had no means of completing. If the world has agreed to praise the travels and manual labours to the Czar of Muscovy, let Col have his share of the like applause, in the proportion of his dominions to the empire of Russia.

This young gentleman was foorting in the mountains of Sky, and when he was weary with following his game, repaired for lodging to Talifker. At night he miffed one of his dogs, and when he went to feek him in the morning, found two eagles feeding on his carcafs.

Col, for he must be named by his poffeffions, hearing that our intention was to visit Jona, offered to conduct us to his chief, Sir Allan Maclean, who lived in the isse of Inch Kenneth, and would readily find us a convenient passage. From this time

WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 173 time was formed an acquaintance, which being begun by kindness, was accidentally continued by constraint; we derived much pleasure from it, and I hope have given ' him no reason to repent it.

The weather was now almost one continued storm, and we were to snatch some happy intermission to be conveyed to Mull, the third Island of the Hebrides, lying about a degree south of Sky, whence we might easily find our way to Inch Kenneth, where Sir Allan Maclean resided, and afterward to Jona.

For this purpose, the most commodious flation that we could take was Armidel, which Sir Alexander Macdonald had now left to a gentleman, who lived there as his factor or steward.

In our way to Armidel, was Coriatachan, where we had already been, and to which therefore we were very willing to return. We

We staid however so long at Talisker, that a great part of our journey was performed in the gloom of the evening. In travelling even thus almost without light thro' naked folitude, when there is a guide whose conduct may be trusted, a mind not naturally too much disposed to fear, may preserve fome degree of cheerfulnes; but what must be the folicitude of him who should be wandering, among the craggs and hollows, benighted, ignorant, and alone?

The fictions of the Got bick romances were not fo remote from credibility as they are now thought. In the full prevalence of the feudal inftitution, when violence defolated the world, and every baron lived in a fortrefs, forefts and caftles were regularly fucceeded by each other, and the adventurer might very fuddenly pafs from the gloom of woods, or the ruggednefs of moors, to feats of plenty, gaiety, and magnificence. Whatever is imaged in the wildeft tale, WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 175 tale, if giants, dragons, and enchantment be excepted, would be felt by him, who, wandering in the mountains without a guide, or upon the fea without a pilot, fhould be carried amidft his terrour and uncertainty, to the hospitality and elegance of Raafay and Dunvegan.

To Coriatachan at last we came, and found ourselves welcomed as before. Here we staid two days, and made such inquiries as curiosity suggested. The house was filled with company, among whom Mr. Macpherson and his sister distinguished themselves by their politeness and accomplishments. By him we were invited to Ostig, a house not far from Armidel, where we might easily hear of a boat, when the weather would suffer us to leave the Island.

OSTIG IN SKY.

At Offig, of which Mr. Macpher fon is minister, we were entertained for some days, then then removed to Armidel, where we finished our observations on the island of Sky.

As this ifland lies in the fifty-feventh degree, the air cannot be fuppofed to have much warmth. The long continuance of the fun above the horizon, does indeed fometimes produce great heat in northern latitudes; but this can only happen in sheltered places, where the atmosphere is to a certain degree flagnant, and the fame mais of air continues to receive for many hours the rays of the fun, and the vapours of the earth. Sky lies open on the west and north to a vaft extent of ocean, and is cooled in the fummer by a perpetual ventilation, but by the fame blafts is kept warm in winter. Their weather is not pleafing. Half the year is deluged with rain. From the autumnal to the vernal equinox, a dry day is hardly known, except when the fhowers are fuspended by a tempeft. Under fuch fkies can be expected no great exuberance berance of vegetation. Their winter overtakes their fummer, and their harvest lies upon the ground drenched with rain. The autumn struggles hard to produce fome of our early fruits. I gathered gooseberries in September; but they were small, and the husk was thick.

Their winter is feldom fuch as puts a full ftop to the growth of plants, or reduces the cattle to live wholly on the furplufage of the fummer. In the year Seventy-one they had a fevere feafon, remembered by the name of the Black Spring, from which the island has not yet recovered. The fnow lay long upon the ground, a calamity hardly known before. Part of their cattle died for want, part were unfeafonably fold to buy fustenance for the owners; and, what I have not read or heard of before. the kine that furvived were fo emaciated and dispirited, that they did not require N the the male at the usual time. Many of the roebucks perished.

The foil, as in other countries, has its diversities. In some parts there is only a thin layer of earth spread upon a rock, which bears nothing but short brown heath, and perhaps is not generally capable of any better product. There are many bogs or mosses of greater or less extent, where the soil cannot be supposed to want depth, though it is too wet for the plough. But we did not observe in these any aquatick plants. The vallies and the mountains are alike darkened with heath. Some grass, however, grows here and there, and some happier so fearth are capable of tillage.

Their agriculture is laborious, and perhaps rather feeble than unfkilful. Their chief manure is fea-weed, which, when they lay it to rot upon the field, gives them a better crop than those of the Highlands. They heap heap fea-fhells upon the dunghill, which in time moulder into a fertilifing fubstance. When they find a vein of earth where they cannot use it, they dig it up, and add it to the mould of a more commodious place.

Their corn grounds often lie in fuch intricacies among the craggs, that there is no room for the action of a team and plough. The foil is then turned up by manual labour with an inftrument called a crooked fpade, of a form and weight which to me appeared very incommodious, and would perhaps be foon improved in a country where workmen could be eafily found and cafily paid. It has a narrow blade of iron fixed to a long and heavy piece of wood, which must have, about a foot and a half above the iron, a knee or flexure with the angle downwards. When the farmer encounters a ftone which is the great impediment of his operations, he drives the blade under it, and bringing the knee or angle to the

the ground, has in the long handle a very forcible lever.

According to the different mode of tillage, farms are diffinguished into long land and fhort land. Long land is that which affords room for a plough, and short land is turned up by the spade.

The grain which they commit to the furrows thus tedioully formed, is either oats or barley. They do not fow barley without very copious manure, and then they expect from it ten for one, an increase equal to that of better countries; but the culture is fo operose that they content themselves commonly with oats; and who can relate without compassion, that after all their diligence they are to expect only a triple increase? It is in vain to hope for plenty, when a third part of the harvest must be referved for feed.

When

When their grain is arrived at the flate which they must confider as ripenes, they do not cut, but pull the barley: to the oats they apply the fickle. Wheel carriages they have none, but make a frame of timber, which is drawn by one horse with the two points behind preffing on the ground. On this they fometimes drag home their sheaves, but often convey them home in a kind of open panier, or frame of flicks upon the horse's back.

Of that which is obtained with fo much difficulty, nothing furely ought to be wafted; yet their method of clearing their oats from the hufk is by parching them in the ftraw. Thus with the genuine improvidence of favages, they deftroy that fodder for want of which their cattle may perifh. From this practice they have two petty conveniencies. They dry the grain fo that it is eafily reduced to meal, and they efcape the theft of the threfher. The tafte contracted N 3 from the fire by the oats, as by every other fcorched fubstance, use must long ago have made grateful. The oats that are not parched must be dried in a kiln.

The barns of Sky I never faw. That which Macleod of Raafay had erected near his houfe was fo contrived, becaufe the harveft is feldom brought home dry, as by perpetual perflation to prevent the mow from heating.

Of their gardens I can judge only from their tables. I did not obferve that the common greens were wanting, and fuppole, that by choofing an advantageous exposition, they can raife all the more hardy esculent plants. Of vegetable fragrance or beauty they are not yet studious. Few vows are made to Flora in the Hebrides.

They gather a little hay, but the grafs is mown late; and is fo often almost dry and I again again very wet, before it is housed, that it becomes a collection of withered stalks without taste or fragrance; it must be eaten by cattle that have nothing else, but by most English farmers would be thrown away.

In the Iflands I have not heard that any subterraneous treasures have been discovered, though where there are mountains, there are commonly minerals. One of the rocks in Col has a black vein, imagined to confift of the ore of lead; but it was never yet opened or effayed. In Sky a black mafs was accidentally picked up, and brought into the house of the owner of the land, who found himself strongly inclined to think it a coal, but unhappily it did not burn in the chimney. Common ores would be here of no great value; for what requires to be separated by fire, must, if it were found, be carried away in its mineral state, here being no fewel for the fmelting house Perhaps by diligent fearch in or forge. N 4 this this world of ftone, fome valuable fpecies of marble might be difcovered. But neither philofophical curiofity, nor commercial industry, have yet fixed their abode here, where the importunity of immediate want fupplied but for the day, and craving on the morrow, has left little room for excurfive knowledge or the pleasing fancies of diftant profit.

They have lately found a manufacure confiderably lucrative. Their rocks abound with kelp, a fea-plant, of which the afhes are melted into glafs. They burn kelp in great quantities, and then fend it away in fhips, which come regularly to purchafe them. This new fource of riches has raifed the rents of many maritime farms; but the tenants pay, like all other tenants, the additional rent with great unwillingnefs; becaufe they confider the profits of the kelp as the mere product of perfonal labour, to which the landlord contributes nothing. How-

However, as any man may be faid to give what he gives the power of gaining, he has certainly as much right to profit from the price of kelp as of any thing elfe found or raifed upon his ground.

This new trade has excited a long and eager litigation between Macdonald and Macleod, for a ledge of rocks, which, till the value of kelp was known, neither of them defired the reputation of poffeffing.

The cattle of Sky are not fo fmall as is commonly believed. Since they have fent their beeves in great numbers to fouthern marts, they have probably taken more care of their breed. At ftated times the annual growth of cattle is driven to a fair, by a general drover, and with the money, which he returns to the farmer, the rents are paid.

The price regularly expected, is from two to three pounds a head : there was once one one fold for five pounds. They go from the Islands very lean, and are not offered to the butcher, till they have been long fatted in Englifb paftures.

Of their black cattle, fome are without horns, called by the Scots bumble cows, as we call a bee an bumble bee, that wants a fting. Whether this difference be fpecifick, or accidental, though we inquired with great diligence, we could not be informed. We are not very fure that the bull is ever without horns, though we have been told, that fuch bulls there are. What is produced by putting a horned and unhorned male and female together, no man has ever tried, that thought the refult worthy of obfervation.

Their horfes are, like their cows, of a moderate fize. I had no difficulty to mount myself commodiously by the favour of the gentlemen. I heard of very little cows cows in Barra, and very little horfes in Rum, where perhaps no care is taken to prevent that diminution of fize, which must always happen, where the greater and the lefs copulate promifcuoufly, and the young animal is reftrained from growth by pernury of fustenance.

The goat is the general inhabitant of the earth, complying with every difference of climate, and of foil. The goats of the *He*brides are like others: nor did 1 hear any thing of their fheep, to be particularly remarked.

In the penury of these malignant regions nothing is left that can be converted to food. The goats and the sheep are milked like the cows. A single meal of a goat is a quart, and of a sheep a pint. Such at least was the account, which I could extract from those of whom I am not fure that they ever had inquired.

The.

The milk of goats is much thinner than that of cows, and that of fheep is much thicker. Sheeps milk is never eaten before it is boiled: as it is thick, it must be very liberal of curd, and the people of St. Kilda form it into fmall cheefes.

The ftags of the mountains are less than those of our parks, or forefts, perhaps not bigger than our fallow deer. Their flesh has no rankness, nor is inferiour in flavour to our common venifon. The roebuck I neither faw nor tasted. These are not countries for a regular chase. The deer are not driven with horns and hounds. A sportfman, with his gun in his hand, watches the animal, and when he has wounded him, traces him by the blood.

They have a race of brinded greyhounds larger and ftronger than those with which we course hares, and those are the only dogs used by them for the chase.

Man

WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 189.

Man is by the use of fire-arms made so much an overmatch for other animals, that in all countries, where they are in use, the wild part of the creation fensibly diminishes. There will probably not be long either stags or roebucks in the Islands. All the beasts of chase would have been lost long ago in countries well inhabited, had they not been preferved by laws for the pleasure of the rich.

There are in Sky neither rats nor mice, but the weafel is fo frequent, that he is heard in houfes rattling behind chefts or beds, as rats in England. They probably owe to his predominance that they have no other vermin; for fince the great rat took poffeffion of this part of the world, fcarce a fhip can touch at any port, but fome of his race are left behind. They have within thefe few years began to infeft the Ifle of Col, where being left by fome trading veffel, veffel, they have increased for want of weafels to oppose them.

The inhabitants of Sky, and of the other Islands, which I have feen, 'are commonly of the middle stature, with fewer among them very tall or very short, than are feen in England, or perhaps, as their numbers are small, the chances of any deviation from the common measure are necessarily few. The tallest men that I faw are among those of higher rank. In regions of barrennels and fcarcity, the human race is hindered in its growth by the same causes as other animals.

The ladies have as much beauty here as in other places, but bloom and foftnefs are not to be expected among the lower claffes, whofe faces are expofed to the rudenefs of the climate, and whofe features are fometimes contracted by want, and fometimes hardened by the blafts. Supreme beauty is is feldom found in cottages or work-fhops, even where no real hardfhips are fuffered. To expand the human face to its full perfection, it feems neceffary that the mind fhould co-operate by placidnefs of content, or confcioulnefs of fuperiority.

Their firength is proportionate to their fize, but they are accustomed to run upon rough ground, and therefore can with great agility skip over the bog, or clamber the mountain. For a campaign in the wastes of America, soldiers better qualified could not have been found. Having little work to do, they are not willing, nor perhaps able to endure a long continuance of manual labour, and are therefore confidered as habitually idle.

Having never been fupplied with these accommodations, which life extensively diversified with trades affords, they fupply their wants by very infufficient shifts, and and endure many inconveniences, which a little attention would eafily relieve. I have feen a horfe carrying home the harveft on a crate. Under his tail was a flick for a crupper, held at the two ends by twifts of ftraw. Hemp will grow in their iflands, and therefore ropes may be had. If they wanted hemp, they might make better cordage of rufhes, or perhaps of nettles, than of ftraw.

Their method of life neither fecures them perpetual health, nor exposes them to any particular diseases. There are phyficians in the Islands, who, I believe, all practife chirurgery, and all compound their own medicines.

It is generally supposed, that life is longer in places where there are few opportunities of luxury; but I found no inftance here of extraordinary longevity. A cottager grows old over his oaten cakes, like like a citizen at a turtle feaft. He is indeed feldom incommoded by corpulence. Poverty preferves him from finking under the burden of himfelf, but he escapes no other injury of time. Inflances of long life are often related, which those who hear them are more willing to credit than examine. To be told that any man has attained a hundred years, gives hope and comfort to him who stands trembling on the brink of his own climacterick.

Length of life is diffributed impartially to very different modes of life in very different climates; and the mountains have no greater examples of age and health than the low lands, where I was introduced to two ladies of high quality; one of whom, in her ninety-fourth year, prefided at her table with the full exercise of all her powers; and the other has attained her eighty-fourth, without any diminution of her vivacity, O and and with little reason to accuse time of depredations on her beauty.

In the Islands, as in most other places, the inhabitants are of different rank, and one does not encroach here upon another. Where there is no commerce nor manufacture, he that is born poor can fcarce become rich; and if none are able to buy eftates, he that is born to land cannot annihilate his family by felling it. This was once the flate of these countries. Perhaps there is no example, till within a century and half, of any family whofe eftate was alienated otherwife than by violence or for-Since money has been brought feiture. amongst them, they have found, like others, the art of fpending more than they receive; and I faw with grief the chief of a very ancient clan, whofe Island was condemned by law to be fold for the fatisfaction of hiscreditors.

The

The name of higheft dignity is Laird, of which there are in the extensive Isle of Sky only three, Macdonald, Macleod, and Mackinnon. The Laird is the original owner of the land, whofe natural power must be very great, where no man lives but by agriculture; and where the produce of the land is not conveyed through the labyrinths of traffick, but paffes directly from the hand that gathers it to the mouth that eats it. The Laird has all those in his power that live upon his farms. Kings can, for the most part, only exalt or degrade. The Laird at pleasure can feed or flarve, can give bread, or withhold it. This inherent power was yet ftrengthened by the kindnefs of confanguinity, and the reverence of patriarchal authority. The Laird was the father of the Clan, and his tenants commonly bore his name. And to thefe principles of original command was added, for many ages, an exclusive right of legal jurisdiction.

This

This multifarious and extensive obligation operated with force fcarcely credible. Every duty, moral or political, was abforbed in affection and adherence to the Chief. Not many years have paffed fince the Clans knew no law but the Laird's will. He told them to whom they fhould be friends or enemies, what king they fhould obey, and what religion they fhould profefs.

When the Scots first role in arms against the fucceffion of the house of Hanover, Lovat, the Chief of the Frasers, was in exile for a rape. The Frasers were very numerous, and very zealous against the government. A pardon was sent to Lovat. He came to the English camp, and the Clan immediately deferted to him.

Next in dignity to the Laird is the Tackiman; a large taker or leafe-holder of land, of which he keeps part, as a domain main in his own hand, and lets part to under-tenants. The Tacksman is necessarily a man capable of fecuring to the Laird the whole rent, and is commonly a collateral relation. These tacks, or subordinate poffeffions, were long confidered as hereditary, and the occupant was diffinguished by the name of the place at which he refided. He held a middle station, by which the highest and the lowest orders were connected. He paid rent and reverence to the Laird, and received them from the tenants. This tenure still fublist, with its original operation, but not with the primitive stability. Since the islanders, no longer content to live, have learned the defire of growing rich, an ancient dependent is in danger of giving way to a higher bidder, at the expence of domestic dignity and hereditary power. The ftranger. whole money buys him preference, confiders himself as paying for all that he has, and is indifferent about the Laird's honour or fafety. The commodioufnels of money is indeed great; but there are fome advantages which money cannot buy, and which therefore no wife man will by the love of money be tempted to forego.

I have found in the hither parts of Scotland, men not defective in judgment or general experience, who confider the Tackfman as a useless burden of the ground, as a drone who lives upon the product of an effate, without the right of property. or the merit of labour, and who impoverifhes at once the landlord and the tenant. The land, fay they, is let to the Tackfman at fix-pence an acre, and by him to the tenant at ten-pence. Let the owner be the immediate landlord to all the tenants : if he fets the ground at eight-pence, he will, increase his revenue by a fourth part, and the tenant's burden will be diminished by a fifth.

Those who pursue this train of reasoning, feem not fufficiently to inquire whither it will lead them, nor to know that it will equally fhew the propriety of fuppreffing all wholefale trade, of fhutting up the shops of every man who fells what he does not make, and of extruding all whofe agency and profit intervene between the manufacturer and the confumer. They may, by firetching their understandings a little wider, comprehend, that all those who by undertaking large quantities of manufacture, and affording employment to many labourers, make themfelves confidered as benefactors to the publick, have only been robbing their workmen with one hand, and their cuftomers with the other. If Crowley had fold only what he could make, and all his fmiths had wrought their own iron with their own hammers, he would have lived on lefs, and they would have fold their work for more. The falaries of fuperintendents and clerks would 04 have have been partly faved, and partly fhared, and nails been fometimes cheaper by a farthing in a hundred. But then if the fmith could not have found an immediate purchafer, he must have deferted his anvil; if there had by accident at any time been more fellers than buyers, the workmen must have reduced their profit to nothing, by underfelling one another; and as no great flock could have been in any hand, no fudden demand of large quantities could have been answered, and the builder must have flood ftill till the nailer could fupply him.

According to these schemes, universal plenty is to begin and end in universal misery. Hope and emulation will be utterly extinguished; and as all must obey the call of immediate necessfity, nothing that requires extensive views, or provides for distant consequences, will ever be performed.

Tq

To the fouthern inhabitants of Scotland, the ftate of the mountains and the iflands is equally unknown with that of Borneo or Sumatra: Of both they have only heard a little, and guess the reft. They are strangers to the language and the manners, to the advantages and wants of the people, whose life they would model, and whose evils they would remedy.

Nothing is less difficult than to procure one convenience by the forfeiture of another. A foldier may expedite his march by throwing away his arms. To banish the Tackfman is easy, to make a country plentiful by diminishing the people, is an expeditious mode of husbandry; but that abundance, which there is nobody to enjoy, contributes little to human happines.

As the mind must govern the hands, fo in every fociety the man of intelligence must direct the man of labour. If the Tacksmen

Tacksmen be taken away, the Hebrides must in their present state be given up to groffnels and ignorance; the tenant, for want of instruction, will be unskilful, and for want of admonition will be negligent. The Laird, in these wide estates, which often confift of illands remote from one another, cannot extend his perfonal influence to all his tenants; and the fleward having no dignity annexed to his character, can have little authority among men taught to pay reverence only to birth. and who regard the Tacksman as their hereditary fuperior; nor can the fleward have equal zeal for the profperity of an eftate profitable only to the Laird, with the Tacksman, who has the Laird's income involved in his own.

The only gentlemen in the iflands are the Lairds, the Tacksmen, and the Minifters, who frequently improve their livings by becoming farmers. If the Tacksmen be be banished, who will be left to impart knowledge, or impress civility? The Laird must always be at a distance from the greater part of his lands; and if he refides at all upon them, must drag his days in solitude, having no longer either a friend or a companion; he will therefore depart to some more comfortable refidence, and leave the tenants to the wildom and mercy of a factor.

Of tenants there are different orders, as they have greater or lefs flock. Land is fometimes leafed to a fmall fellowship, who live in a cluster of huts, called a Tenants Town, and are bound jointly and feparately for the payment of their rent. These, I believe, employ in the care of their cattle, and the labour of tillage, a kind of tenants yet lower; who having a hut, with grass for a certain number of cows and sheep, pay their rent by a stipulated quantity of labour.

The

The condition of domeftic fervants, or the price of occasional labour, I do not know with certainty. I was told that the maids have sheep, and are allowed to spin for their own clothing; perhaps they have no pecuniary wages, or none but in very wealthy families. The state of life which has hitherto been purely pastoral, begins now to be a little variegated with commerce; but novelties enter by degrees, and till one mode has fully prevailed over the other, no fettled notion can be formed.

Such is the fyftem of infular fubordination, which, having little variety, cannot afford much delight in the view, nor long detain the mind in contemplation. The inhabitants were for a long time perhaps not unhappy; but their content was a muddy mixture of pride and ignorance, an indifference for pleafures which they did not know, a blind veneration for their chiefs, WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 205 chiefs, and a ftrong conviction of their own importance.

Their pride has been crushed by the heavy hand of a vindictive conqueror, whose severities have been followed by laws, which, though they cannot be called cruel, have produced much discontent, because they operate upon the surface of life, and make every eye bear witness to subjection. To be compelled to a new dress has always been found painful.

Their chiefs being now deprived of their jurifdiction, have already loft much of their influence; and as they gradually degenerate from patriarchal rulers to rapacious landlords, they will diveft themfelves of the little that remains.

That dignity which they derived from an opinion of their military importance, the law, which difarmed them, has abated. An

An old gentleman, delighting himfelf with the recollection of better days, related, that forty years ago, a Chieftain walked out attended by ten or twelve followers, with their arms rattling. That animating rabble has now ceafed. The Chief has loft his formidable retinue; and the Highlander walks his heath unarmed and defencelefs, with the peaceable fubmiffion of a French peafant or Englifh cottager.

Their ignorance grows every day lefs, but their knowledge is yet of little other use than to shew them their wants. They are now in the period of education, and feel the uneasiness of discipline, without yet perceiving the benefit of instruction.

The laft law, by which the Highlanders are deprived of their arms, has operated with efficacy beyond expectation. Of former flatutes made with the fame defign, the execution had been feeble, and the effect incon-inconfiderable. Concealment was undoubtedly practifed, and perhaps often with connivance. There was tendernefs or partiality on one fide, and obstinacy on the other. But the law, which followed the victory of Culloden, found the whole nation dejected and intimidated; informations were given without danger, and without fear, and the arms were collected with fuch rigour, that every house was despoiled of its defence.

To difarm part of the Highlands, could give no reafonable occafion of complaint. Every government muft be allowed the power of taking away the weapon that is lifted againft it. But the loyal Clans murmured, with fome appearance of juffice, that after having defended the King, they were forbidden for the future to defend themfelves; and that the fword fhould be forfeited, which had been legally employed. Their cafe is undoubtedly hard, but in 5 political regulations, good cannot be complete, it can only be predominant.

Whether by difarming a people thus broken into feveral tribes, and thus remote from the feat of power, more good than evil has been produced, may deferve inquiry. The fupreme power in every community has the right of debarring everyindividual, and every fubordinate fociety, from felf-defence, only because the supreme power is able to defend them; and therefore where the governor cannot act, he must trust the subject to act for himself. These Islands might be wasted with fire and fword before their fovereign would know their diffress. A gang of robbers, such as has been lately found confederating themfelves in the Highlands, might lay a wide region under contribution. The crew of a petty privateer might land on the largest and most wealthy of the Islands, and riot without control in cruelty and wafte. It was was observed by one of the Chiefs of Sky, that fifty armed men might, without resistance, ravage the country. Laws that place the subjects in such a state, contravene the first principles of the compact of authority: they exact obedience, and yield no protection.

It affords a generous and manly pleafure to conceive a little nation gathering its fruits and tending its herds with fearlefs confidence, though it lies open on every fide to invalion, where, in contempt of walls and trenches, every man fleeps fecurely with his fword befide him; where all on the first approach of hostility came together at the call to battle, as at a fummons to a festal show; and committing their cattle to the care of those whom age or nature has difabled, engage the enemy with that competition for hazard and for glory, which operate in men that fight under the eye of those, whose diflike or kindness they P have have always confidered as the greatest evil or the greatest good.

This was, in the beginning of the prefent century, the flate of the Highlands. Every man was a foldier, who partook of national confidence, and interefted himfelf in national honour. To lofe this fpirit, is to lofe what no fmall advantage will compenfate.

It may likewife deferve to be inquired, whether a great nation ought to be totally commercial? whether, amidft the uncertainty of human affairs, too much attention to one mode of happiness may not endanger others? whether the pride of riches muft not sometimes have recours to the protection of courage? and whether, if it be necessary to preferve in some part of the empire the military spirit, it can subsist more commodiously in any place, than in remote and unprofitable provinces, 7 where

WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 211 where it can commonly do little harm, and whence it may be called forth at any fudden exigence?

It must however be confessed, that a man who places honour only in fuccessful violence, is a very troublessome and pernicious animal in time of peace; and that the martial character cannot prevail in a whole people, but by the diminution of all other virtues. He that is accustomed to resolve all right into conquest, will have very little tenderness or equity. All the friendship in fuch a life can only be a confederacy of invasion, or alliance of defence. The strong must flourish by force, and the weak subfist by stratagem.

Till the Highlanders loft their ferocity, with their arms, they fuffered from each other all that malignity could dictate, or precipitance could act. Every provocation was revenged with blood, and no man that P 2 ventured ventured into a numerous company, by whatever occasion brought together, was fure of returning without a wound. If they are now exposed to foreign hostilities, they may talk of the danger, but can feldom feel it. If they are no longer martial, they are no longer quarrelsome. Misery is caused for the most part, not by a heavy crush of difaster, but by the corrosion of less visible evils, which canker enjoyment, and undermine fecurity. The visit of an invader is necessfarily rare, but domestick animosities allow no cessation.

The abolition of the local jurifdictions, which had for fo many ages been exercifed by the Chiefs, has likewife its evil and its good. The feudal conftitution naturally diffufed itfelf into long ramifications of fubordinate authority. To this general temper of the government was added the peculiar form of the country, broken by mountains into many fubdivisions fcarcely acceffible

WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 213 acceffible but to the natives, and guarded by paffes, or perplexed with intricacies, through which national justice could not find its way.

The power of deciding controversies, and of punishing offences, as fome fuch power there must always be, was entrusted to the Lairds of the country, to those whom the people confidered as their natural It cannot be fuppofed that a rugjudges. ged proprietor of the rocks, unprincipled and unenlightened, was a nice refolver of entangled claims, or very exact in proportioning punishment to offences. But the more he indulged his own will, the more he held his vaffals in dependance. Prudence and innocence, without the favour of the Chief, conferred no fecurity; and ' crimes involved no danger, when the judge was refolute to acquit.

When

When the Chiefs were men of knowledge and virtue, the convenience of a domeflick judicature was great. No long journies were neceffary, nor artificial delays could be practifed; the character, the alliances, and interefts of the litigants were known to the court, and all falfe pretences were eafily detected. The fentence, when it was paft, could not be evaded; the power of the Laird fuperfeded formalities, and juffice could not be defeated by intereft or ftratagem.

I doubt not but that fince the regular judges have made their circuits through the whole country, right has been every where more wifely and more equally diffributed; the complaint is, that litigation is grown troublefome, and that the magisfrates are too few, and therefore often too remote for general convenience.

Many

Many of the fmaller Islands have no legal officer within them. I once asked, If a crime should be committed, by what authority the offender could be seized? and was told, that the Laird would exert his right; a right which he muss now usurp, but which sure should be seized dicate, and which is therefore yet exercised in lower degrees by some of the proprietors, when legal processes cannot be obtained.

In all greater questions, however, there is now happily an end to all fear or hope from malice or from favour. The roads are fecure in those places through which, forty years ago, no traveller could pass without a convoy. All trials of right by the fword are forgotten, and the mean are in as little danger from the powerful as in other places. No scheme of policy has, in any country, yet brought the rich and poor on equal terms into courts of judicar P 4 ture.

ture. Perhaps experience, improving on experience, may in time effect it.

Those who have long enjoyed dignity and power, ought not to lofe it without fome equivalent. There was paid to the Chiefs by the publick, in exchange for their privileges, perhaps a fum greater than most of them had ever poffeffed, which excited a thirft for riches, of which it shewed them the use. When the power of birth and station ceases, no hope remains but from the prevalence of money. Power and wealth fupply the place of each other. Power 'confers the ability of gratifying our defire without the confent of Wealth enables us to obtain the others. confent of others to our gratification. Power, fimply confidered, whatever it confers on one, must take from another. Wealth enables its owner to give to others, by taking only from himfelf. Power pleafes the violent and proud: wealth delights the placid WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 217 placid and the timorous. Youth therefore flies at power, and age grovels after riches.

The Chiefs, divested of their prerogatives, neceffarily turned their thoughts to the improvement of their revenues, and expect more rent, as they have lefs homage. The tenant, who is far from perceiving that his condition is made better in the fame proportion, as that of his landlord is made worfe, does not immediately fee why his industry is to be taxed more heavily than before. He refuses to pay the demand, and is ejected; the ground is then let to a stranger, who perhaps brings a larger flock, but who, taking the land at its full price, treats with the Laird upon equal terms, and confiders him not as a Chief, but as a trafficker in land. Thus the eftate perhaps is improved, but the Clan is broken.

It feems to be the general opinion, that the rents have been raifed with too much eagernes. Some regard must be paid to prejudice. Those who have hitherto paid but little, will not fuddenly be perfuaded to pay much, though they can afford it. As ground is gradually improved, and the value of money decreases, the rent may be raifed without any diminution of the farmer's profits: yet it is necessary in these countries, where the ejection of a tenant is a greater evil, than in more populous places, to confider not merely what the land will produce, but with what ability the inhabitant can cultivate it. A certain flock can allow but a certain payment; for if the land be doubled, and the flock remains the fame, the tenant becomes no richer. The proprietors of the Highlands might perhaps often increase their income, by subdividing the farms, and allotting to every occupier only fo many acres as he can profitably employ, but that they want people.

There

There feems now, whatever be the caufe, to be through a great part of the Highlands a general difcontent. That adherence, which was lately profeffed by every man to the Chief of his name, has now little prevalence; and he that cannot live as he defires at home, liftens to the tale of fortunate iflands and happy regions, where every man may have land of his own, and eat the product of his labour without a fuperior.

Those who have obtained grants of American lands, have, as is well known, invited fettlers from all quarters of the globe; and among other places, where oppression might produce a wish for new habitations, their emissions would not fail to try their personal to try their personal to the Isles of Scotland, where at the time when the Clans were newly disunited from their Chiefs, and exasperated by unprecedented exactions, it is no wonder that they prevailed.

Whether

Whether the mischiefs of emigration were immediately perceived, may be jufly They who went first, were questioned. probably fuch as could beft be fpared; but the accounts fent by the earlieft adventurers. whether true or false, inclined many to follow them; and whole neighbourhoods formed parties for removal; fo that departure from their native country is no longer exile. He that goes thus accompanied, carries with him all that makes life pleafant. He fits down in a better climate, furrounded by his kindred and his friends: they carry with them their language, their opinions, their popular fongs, and hereditary merriment: they change nothing but the place of their abode; and of that change they perceive the benefit.

This is the real effect of emigration, if those that go away together settle on the fame spot, and preserve their ancient union. But some relate that these adventurous visitants ants of unknown regions, after a voyage paffed in dreams of plenty and felicity, are disperfed at last upon a fylvan wilderness, where their first years must be spent in toil, to clear the ground which is afterwards to be tilled, and that the whole effect of their undertaking is only more fatigue and equal scarcity.

Both accounts may be fuspected. Those who are gone will endeavour by every art to draw others after them; for as their numbers are greater, they will provide better for themselves. When Nova Scotia was first peopled, I remember a letter, published under the character of a New Planter, who related how much the climate put him in mind of Italy. Such intelligence the Hebridians probably receive from their transmarine correspondents. But with equal temptations of interest, and perhaps with no greater niceneis of veracity, the owners of the Islands spread stories of American hardships hardships to keep their people content at home.

Some method to flop this epidemick defire of wandering, which fpreads its contagion from valley to valley, deferves to be fought with great diligence. In more fruitful countries, the removal of one, only makes room for the fucceffion of another: but in the Hebrides, the lofs of an inhabitant leaves a lafting vacuity; for nobody born in any other parts of the world will choofe this country for his refidence; and an Ifland once depopulated will remain a defert, as long as the prefent facility of travel gives every one, who is difcontented and unfettled, the choice of his abode.

Let it be inquired, whether the first intention of those who are fluttering on the wing, and collecting a flock that they may take their flight, be to attain good, or to avoid evil. If they are diffatisfied fied with that part of the globe, which their birth has allotted them, and refolve not to live without the pleafures of happier climates; if they long for bright funs, and calm fkies, and flowery fields, and fragrant gardens, I know not by what eloquence they can be perfuaded, or by what offers they can be hired, to ftay.

But if they are driven from their native country by politive evils, and difgusted by ill-treatment, real or imaginary, it were fit to remove their grievances, and quiet their refentment; fince, if they have been hitherto undutiful subjects, they will not much mend their principles by American conversation.

To allure them into the army, it was thought proper to indulge them in the continuance of their national drefs. If this conceffion could have any effect, it might eafily be made. That diffimilitude of appearance, pearance, which was fuppoled to keep them diffinct from the reft of the nation, might difincline them from coalefcing with the Penfylvanians or people of Connecticut. If the reftitution of their arms will reconcile them to their country, let them have again thole weapons, which will not be more mifchievous at home than in the Colonies. That they may not fly from the increase of rent, I know not whether the general good does not require that the landlords be, for a time, restrained in their demands, and kept quiet by pensions proportionate to their loss.

To hinder infurrection by driving away the people, and to govern peaceably by having no fubjects, is an expedient that argues no great profundity of politicks. To foften the obdurate, to convince the mistaken, to mollify the refentful, are worthy of a statesman; but it affords a legislator little felf-applause to confider, that where

WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 225 where there was formerly an infurrection, there is now a wildernefs.

It has been a queftion often agitated without folution, why those northern regions are now fo thinly peopled, which formerly overwhelmed with their armies the Roman empire. The queftion fuppofes what I believe is not true, that they had once more inhabitants than they could maintain, and overflowed only because they were full.

This is to effimate the manners of all countries and ages by our own. Migration, while the ftate of life was unfettled, and there was little communication of intelligence between diftant places, was among the wilder nations of Europe, capricious and cafual. An adventitious projector heard of a fertile coaft unoccupied, and led out a colony; a chief of renown for bravery, called the young men together, and led them out to try what fortune would prefent. When Cæfar was in Gaul, he found the Helvetians preparing to go they knew not whither, and put a ftop to their motions. They fettled again in their own country, where they were fo far from wanting room, that they had accumulated three years provision for their march.

The religion of the North was military; if they could not find enemies, it was their duty to make them: they travelled in quest of danger, and willing took the chance of Empire or Death. If their troops were numerous, the countries from which they were collected are of vaft extent, and without much exuberance of people great armies may be raifed where every man is a foldier. But their true numbers were never known. Those who were conquered by them are their historians, and shame may have excited them to fay, that they were overwhelmed with multitudes. To count is a modern practice, the ancient method 7

WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 227 method was to guess; and when numbers are guessed they are always magnified.

Thus England has for feveral years been filled with the atchievements of feventy thousand Highlanders employed in America. I have heard from an English officer. not much inclined to favour them. that their behaviour deferved a very high degree of military praise; but their number has been much exaggerated. One of the minifters told me, that feventy thousand men could not have been found in all the Highlands, and that more than twelve thousand never took the field. Those that went to the American war, went to destruction. Of the old Highland regiment, confifting of twelve hundred, only feventy-fix furvived to fee their country again.

The Gothick fwarms have at leaft been multiplied with equal liberality. That they bore no great proportion to the inhabitants, in whose countries they settled, is plain from the paucity of northern words now found in the provincial languages. Their country was not deferted for want of room, because it was covered with forests of vast extent; and the first effect of plenitude of inhabitants is the destruction of wood. As the Europeans spread over America, the lands are gradually laid naked.

I would not be underftood to fay, that neceffity had never any part in their expeditions. A nation, whose agriculture is fcanty or unfkilful, may be driven out by famine. A nation of hunters may have exhausted their game. I only affirm that the northern regions were not, when their irruptions subdued the Romans, overpeopled with regard to their real extent of territory, and power of fertility. In a country fully inhabited, however afterward laid waste, evident marks will remain of its former populouss. But of Scandinavia and Germany, nothing is known but that as we , trace trace their flate upwards into antiquity, their woods were greater and their cultivated ground was lefs.

That causes very different from want of room may produce a general disposition to feek another country, is apparent from the present conduct of the Highlanders, who are in fome places ready to threaten a total feceffion. The numbers which have already gone, though like other numbers they may be magnified, are very great, and fuch as if they had gone together and agreed upon any certain fettlement, might have founded an independent government in the depths of the western continent. Nor are they only the lowest and most indigent; many men of confiderable wealth have taken with them their train of labourers and dependants; and if they continue the feudal scheme of polity, may eftablish new Clans in the other hemisphere.

That

That the immediate motives of their defertion must be imputed to their landlords, may be reasonably concluded, because fome Lairds of more prudence and less rapacity have kept their vassals undiminished. From Raasay only one man had been feduced, and at Col there was no wish to go away.

The traveller who comes hither from more opulent countries, to fpeculate upon the remains of paftoral life, will not much wonder that a common Highlander has no ftrong adherence to his native foil; for of animal enjoyments, or of phyfical good, he leaves nothing that he may not find again wherefoever he may be thrown.

The habitations of men in the Hebrides may be diffinguished into huts and houses. By a bousse, I mean a building with one ftory over another; by a but, a dwelling with only one floor. The Laird, who formerly merly lived in a caftle, now lives in a houfe; fometimes fufficiently neat, but feldom very fpacious or fplendid. The Tackfmen and the Ministers have commonly houfes. Wherever there is a house, the stranger finds a welcome, and to the other evils of exterminating Tackssen may be added the unavoidable cellation of hospitality, or the devolution of too heavy a burden on the Ministers.

Of the houses little can be faid. They are small, and by the necessity of accumulating stores, where there are so few opportunities of purchase, the rooms are very heterogeneously filled. With want of cleanlines it were ingratitude to reproach them. The servants having been bred upon the naked earth, think every floor clean, and the quick succession of guess, perhaps not always over-elegant, does not allow much time for adjusting their apartments.

Ć4

Hut

Huts are of many gradations; from murky dens, to commodious dwellings.

The wall of a common hut is always built without mortar, by a skilful adaptation of loofe ftones. Sometimes perhaps a double wall of flones is raifed, and the intermediaté fpace filled with earth. The air is thus completely excluded. Some walks are, 1 think, formed of turfs, held together by a wattle, or texture of twigs. Of the meanest huts, the first room is lighted by the entrance, and the fecond by the fmoke-hole. The fire is usually made in the middle. But there are huts, or dwellings, of only one ftory, inhabited by gentlemen, which have walls cemented with mortar, glafs windows, and boarded floors. Of these all have chimneys, and fome chimneys have grates.

The houle and the furniture are not always nicely fuited. We were driven once, once, by miffing a paffage, to the hut of a gentleman, where, after a very liberal fupper, when I was conducted to my chamber, I found an elegant bed of Indian cotton, fpread with fine fheets. The accommodation was flattering; I undreffed myfelf, and felt my feet in the mire. The bed flood upon the bare earth, which a long courfe of rain had foftened to a puddle.

In pastoral countries the condition of the lowest rank of people is sufficiently wretched. Among manufacturers, men that have no property may have art and industry, which make them necessary, and therefore valuable. But where flocks and corn are the only wealth, there are always more hands than work, and of that work there is little in which skill and dexterity can be much distinguisted. He therefore who is born poor never can be rich. The fon merely occupies the place of the father, and life life knows nothing of progression or advancement.

The petty tenants, and labouring peafants, live in miferable cabins, which afford them little more than fhelter from the ftorms. The Boor of Norway is faid to make all his own utenfils. In the Hebrides, whatever might be their ingenuity, the want of wood leaves them no materials. They are probably content with fuch accommodations as ftones of different forms and fizes can afford them.

Their food is not better than their lodging. They feldom tafte the flefh of land animals; for here are no markets. What each man eats is from his own flock. The great effect of money is to break property into fmall parts. In towns, he that has a fhilling may have a piece of meat; but where there is no commerce, no man can eat mutton but by killing a fheep.

Fifh

Fish in fair weather they need not want; but, I believe, man never lives long on fish, but by constraint; he will rather feed upon roots and berries.

The only fewel of the Islands is peat, Their wood is all confumed, and coal they have not yet found. Peat is dug out of the marshes, from the depth of one foot to that of fix. That is accounted the best which is nearest the surface. It appears to be a mais of black earth held together by vegetable fibres. I know not whether the earth be bituminous, or whether the fibres be not the only combustible part; which, by heating the interposed earth red hot, make a burning mass. The heat is not very ftrong nor lafting. The afhes are yellowish, and in a large quantity. When they dig peat, they cut it into fquare pieces, and pile it up to dry befide the houfe. In fome places it has an offensive smell. Īt is like wood charked for the fmith. The common common method of making peat fires, is by heaping it on the hearth; but it burnswell in grates, and in the beft houses is fo used.

The common opinion is, that peat grows again where it has been cut; which, as it feems to be chiefly a vegetable fubitance, is not unlikely to be true, whether known or not to those who relate it.

There are water mills in Sky and Raafay; but where they are too far diftant, the houfe-wives grind their oats with a quern, or hand-mill, which confifts of two ftones, about a foot and a half in diameter; the lower is a little convex, to which the concavity of the upper must be fitted. In the middle of the upper ftone is a round hole, and on one fide is a long handle. The grinder sheds the corn gradually into the hole with one hand, and works the handle round with the other. The corn flides down down the convexity of the lower stone, and by the motion of the upper is ground in its passage. These stores are found in Lochabar.

The Islands afford few pleasures, except to the hardy sportsman, who can tread the moor and climb the mountain. The distance of one family from another, in a country where travelling has so much difficulty, makes frequent intercourse impracticable. Visits last several days, and are commonly paid by water; yet I never faw a boat furnissed with benches, or made commodious by any addition to the first fabrick. Conveniencies are not missed where they never were enjoyed.

The folace which the bagpipe can give, they have long enjoyed; but among other changes, which the last revolution introduced, the use of the bagpipe begins to be forgotten. Some of the chief families ftill ftill entertain a piper, whole office was anciently hereditary. Macrimmon was piper to Macleod, and Rankin to Maclean of Col.

The tunes of the bagpipe are traditional. There has been in Sky, beyond all time of memory, a college of pipers, under the direction of Macrimmon, which is not quite extinct. There was another in Mull, fuperintended by Rankin, which expired about fixteen years ago. To these colleges, while the pipe retained its honour, the fludents of musick repaired for education. I have had my dinner exhilarated by the bagpipe, at Armidale, at Dunvegan, and in Col.

The general conversation of the Islanders has nothing particular. I did not meet with the inquisitiveness of which I have read, and suspect the judgment to have been rashly made. A stranger of curiosity comes into a place where a stranger is feldom dom feen: he importunes the people with queftions, of which they cannot guefs the motive, and gazes with furprife on things which they, having had them always before their eyes, do not fufpect of any thing wonderful. He appears to them like fome being of another world, and then thinks it peculiar that they take their turn to inquire whence he comes, and whither he is going.

The Islands were long unfurnished with instruction for youth, and none but the sons of gentlemen could have any literature. There are now parochial schools, to which the lord of every manor pays a certain stipend. Here the children are taught to read; but by the rule of their institution, they teach only English, so that the natives read a language which they may never use or understand. If a parish, which often happens, contains several Islands, the school being but in one, cannot affist the rest.

reft. This is the ftate of Col, which, however, is more enlightened than fome other places; for the deficiency is fupplied by a young gentleman, who, for his own improvement, travels every year on foot over the Highlands to the feffion at Aberdeen; and at his return, during the vacation, teaches to read and write in his native Ifland.

In Sky there are two grammar fchools, where boarders are taken to be regularly educated. The price of board is from three pounds, to four pounds ten fhillings a year, and that of inftruction is half a crown a quarter. But the fcholars are birds of paffage, who live at fchool only in the fummer; for in winter provisions cannot be made for any confiderable number in one place. This periodical difpersion impresses ftrongly the fcarcity of these countries.

I heard

Having heard of no boarding-school for ladies nearer than Inverness, I suppose their education is generally domestick. The elder daughters of the higher families are sent into the world, and may contribute by their acquisitions to the improvement of the rest.

Women must here ftudy to be either pleasing or useful. Their deficiencies are feldom supplied by very liberal fortunes. A hundred pounds is a portion beyond the hope of any but the Laird's daughter. They do not indeed often give money with their daughters; the question is, How many cows a young lady will bring her husband? A rich maiden has from ten to forty; but two cows are a decent fortune for one who pretends to no diffunction.

The religion of the Islands is that of the Kirk of Scotland. The gentlemen with whom I conversed are all inclined to the R English English liturgy; but they are obliged to maintain the established Minister, and the country is too poor to afford payment to another, who must live wholly on the contribution of his audience.

They therefore all attend the worfhip of the Kirk, as often as a vifit from their Minifter, or the practicability of travelling gives them opportunity; nor have they any reafon to complain of infufficient paftors; for I faw not one in the Hlands, whom I had reafon to think either deficient in learning, or irregular in life; but found feveral with whom I could not converfe without wifhing, as my refpect increafed, that they had not been Prefbyterians.

The ancient rigour of puritanism is now very much relaxed, though all are not yet equally enlightened. I fometimes met with prejudices fufficiently malignant, but they were prejudices of ignorance. The Ministers

Ministers in the Islands had attained such knowledge as may justly be admired in men, who have no motive to study, but generous curiosity, or, what is still better, defire of usefulnes; with such politeness as so narrow a circle of converse could not have supplied, but to minds naturally disposed to elegance.

Reafon and truth will prevail at laft. The moft learned of the Scottifh Doctors would now gladly admit a form of prayer, if the people would endure it. The zeal or rage of congregations has its different degrees. In fome parifhes the Lord's Prayer is fuffered: in others it is ftill rejected as a form; and he that fhould make it part of his fupplication would be fufpected of heretical pravity.

The principle upon which extemporary prayer was originally introduced, is no longer admitted. The Minister formerly, R 2 in in the effusion of his prayer, expected immediate, and perhaps perceptible infpiration, and therefore thought it his duty not to think before what he should fay. It is now universally confessed, that men pray as they fpeak on other occasions, according to the general measure of their abilities and attainments. Whatever each may think of a form prefcribed by another, he cannot but believe that he can himfelf compose by fludy and meditation a better prayer than will rife in his mind at a fudden call; and if he has any hope of fupernatural help, why may he not as well receive it when he writes as when he fpeaks ?

In the variety of mental powers, fome must perform extemporary prayer with much imperfection; and in the eagerness and rashness of contradictory opinions, if public liturgy be left to the private judgment of every Minister, the congreWESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 245 congregation may often be offended or milled.

There is in Scotland, as among ourfelves, a reftlefs fulpicion of popifh machinations, and a clamour of numerous converts to the Romifh religion. The report is, I believe, in both parts of the Ifland equally falfe. The Romifh religion is profeffed only in Egg and Canna, two fmall iflands, into which the Reformation never made its way. If any miffionaries are bufy in the Highlands, their zeal entitles them to refpect, even from those who cannot think favourably of their doctrine.

The political tenets of the Islanders I was not curious to investigate, and they were not eager to obtrude. Their converfation is decent and inoffensive. They difdain to drink for their principles, and there is no difaffection at their tables. I never heard a health offered by a Highlander that R 3 might might not have circulated with propriety within the precincts of the King's palace.

Legal government has yet fomething of novelty to which they cannot perfectly conform. The ancient fpirit that appealed only to the fword, is yet among them. The tenant of Scalpa, an illand belonging to Macdonald, took no care to bring his rent; when the landlord talked of exacting payment, he declared his refolution to keep his ground, and drive all intruders from the Hland, and continued to feed his cattle as on his own land, till it became neceffary for the Sheriff to diflodge him by violence.

The various kinds of fuperfition which prevailed here, as in all other regions of ignorance, are by the diligence of the Minifters almost extirpated.

Of Browny, mentioned by Martin, nothing has been heard for many years. Browny.

Browny was a flurdy Fairy; who, if he was fed, and kindly treated, would, as they faid, do a great deal of work. They now pay him no wages, and are content to labour for themfelves.

In Troda, within these three-and-thirty years, milk was put every Saturday for Greogach, or the Old Man with the Long Beard. Whether Greogach was courted as kind, or dreaded as tetrible, whether they meant, by giving him the milk, to obtain good, or avert evil, I was not informed. The Minister is now living by whom the practice was abolished.

They have ftill among them a great number of charms for the cure of different difeafes; they are all invocations, perhaps transmitted to them from the times of popery, which increasing knowledge will bring into difuse.

They have opinions, which cannot be ranked with fuperstition, because they regard only natural effects. They expect better crops of grain, by fowing their feed in the moon's increase. The moon has great influence in vulgar philosophy. In my memory it was a precept annually given in one of the English Almanacks, to kill bogs when the moon was increasing, and the bacon would prove the better in boiling.

We fhould have had little claim to the praife of curiofity, if we had not endeavoured with particular attention to examine the queftion of the Second Sight. Of an opinion received for centuries by a whole nation, and supposed to be confirmed through its whole descent, by a feries of successive facts, it is desirable that the truth should be established, or the fallacy detected.

The Second Sight is an impression made either by the mind upon the eye, or by the eye upon the mind, by which things diffant or future are perceived, and seen as if they were were present. A man on a journey fat from home falls from his horfe, another, who is perhaps at work about the house, fees him bleeding on the ground, commonly with a landscape of the place where the accident befalls him. Another feer. driving home his cattle, or wandering in idleness, or musing in the funshine, is fuddenly furprifed by the appearance of a bridal ceremony, or funeral procession, and counts the mourners or attendants, of whom, if he knows them, he relates the names, if he knows them not, he can describe the dreffes. Things distant are feen at the inftant when they happen. Of things future I know not that there is any rule for determining the time between the Sight and the event.

This receptive faculty, for power it cannot be called, is neither voluntary nor conftant. The appearances have no dependence upon choice: they cannot be fummoned, fummoned, detained, or recalled. The impression is sudden, and the effect often painful.

By the term Second Sight, feems to be meant a mode of feeing, fuperadded to that which Nature generally beftows, In the Earfe it is called Taifch; which fignifies likewife a fpectre, or a vision. I know not, nor is it likely that the Highlanders ever examined, whether by Taifch, ufed for Second Sight, they mean the power of feeing, or the thing feen.

I do not find it to be true, as it is reported, that to the Second Sight nothing is prefented but phantoms of evil. Good feems to have the fame proportion in those visionary scenes, as it obtains in real life: almost all remarkable events have evil for their basis; and are either miseries incurred, or miseries escaped. Our sense is so much stronger of what we suffer, than of what what we enjoy, that the ideas of pain predominate in almost every mind. What is recollection but a revival of vexations, or history but a record of wars, treasons, and calamities? Death, which is confidered as the greatest evil, happens to all. The greatest good, be it what it will, is the lot but of a part.

That they should often see death is to be expected; because death is an event frequent and important. But they see likewise more pleasing incidents. A gentleman told me, that when he had once gone far from his own Island, one of his labouring fervants predicted his return, and defcribed the livery of his attendant, which he had never worn at home; and which had been, without any previous defign, occasionally given him.

Our defire of information was keen, and our inquiry frequent. Mr. Bofwell's franknefs nefs and gaiety made every body communicative; and we heard many tales of these airy shows, with more or less evidence and distinctness.

It is the common talk of the Lowland Scots, that the notion of the Second Sight is wearing away with other fuperflitions; and that its reality is no longer fuppofed, but by the groffeft people. How far its prevalence ever extended, or what ground it has loft, I know not. The Iflanders of all degrees, whether of rank or underflanding, univerfally admit it, except the Minifters, who univerfally deny it, and are fufpected to deny it, in confequence of a fyftem, againft conviction. One of them honeftly told me, that he came to Sky with a refolution not to believe it.

Strong reafons for incredulity will readily occur. This faculty of feeing things out of fight is local, and commonly ufelefs. It is is a breach of the common order of things, without any visible reason or perceptible benefit. It is ascribed only to a people very little enlightened; and among them, for the most part, to the mean and the ignorant.

To the confidence of these objections it may be replied, that by prefuming to determine what is fit, and what is beneficial, they prefuppole more knowledge of the universal system than man has attained; and therefore depend upon principles too complicated and extensive for our comprehension; and that there can be no fecurity in the confequence, when the premises are not underftood; that the Second Sight is only wonderful because it is rare, for confidered in itself, it involves no more difficulty than dreams, or perhaps than the regular exercise of the cogitative faculty; that a general opinion of communicative impulses, or visionary representations, has prevailed prevailed in all ages and all nations; that particular inflances have been given, with fuch evidence, as neither Bacon nor Bayle has been able to refift; that fudden impreffions, which the event has verified, have been felt by more than own or publich them; that the Second Sight of the Hebrides implies only the local frequency of a power, which is no where totally unknown; and that where we are unable to decide by antecedent reason, we must be content to yield to the force of testimony.

By pretention to Second Sight, no profit was ever fought or gained. It is an involuntary affection, in which neither hope nor fear are known to have any part. Thole who profets to feel it, do not boatt of it as a privilege, nor are confidered by others as advantageoufly diffinguished. They have no temptation to feign; and their hearers have no motive to encourage the impofture.

To

To talk with any of these series is not easy. There is one living in Sky, with whom we would have gladly conversed; but he was very gross and ignorant, and knew no English. The proportion in these countries of the poor to the rich is such, that if we suppose the quality to be accidental, it can very rarely happen to a man of education; and yet on such men it has sometimes fallen. There is now a Second Sighted gentleman in the Highlands, who complains of the terrors to which he is exposed:

The forefight of the Seers is not always preference: they are impreffed with images, of which the event only fhews them the meaning. They tell what they have feen to others, who are at that time not more knowing than themfelves, but may become at laft very adequate witneffes, by comparing the narrative with its verification.

To collect fufficient testimonies for the fatisfaction of the publick, or of ourfelves, would have required more time than we could beftow. There is, against it, the feeming analogy of things confusedly seen, and little understood; and for it, the indistinct cry of national persuasion, which may be perhaps resolved at last into prejudice and tradition. I never could advance my curiosity to conviction; but came away at last only willing to believe.

As there fubfifts no longer in the Islands much of that peculiar and difcriminative form of life, of which the idea had delighted our imagination, we were willing to liften to fuch accounts of paft times as would be given us. But we foon found what memorials were to be expected from an illiterate people, whofe whole time is a feries of diftrefs; where every morning is labouring with expedients for the evening; and where all mental pains or pleafure arofe from from the dread of winter, the expectation of fpring, the caprices of their Chiefs, and the motions of the neighbouring Clans; where there was neither fhame from ignorance, nor pride in knowledge; neither curiofity to inquire, nor vanity to communicate.

The Chiefs indeed were exempt from urgent penury, and daily difficulties; and in their houses were preferved what accounts remained of past ages. But the Chiefs were fometimes ignorant and carelefs, and fometimes kept bufy by turbulence and contention; and one generation of ignorance effaces the whole feries of unwritten history. Books are faithful repositories, which may be a while neglected or forgotten; but when they are opened again, will again impart their inftruction : memory, once interrupted, is not to be recalled. Written learning is a fixed luminary, which, after the cloud that had hidden it has past away, is again bright in its proper station. Tradition is but a meteor, which, if once it falls, cannot be rekindled.

It feems to be univerfally fuppoled, that much of the local hiftory was preferved by the Bards, of whom one is faid to have been retained by every great family. After thefe Bards were fome of my firft inquiries; and I received fuch anfwers as, for a while, made me pleafe myfelf with my increase of knowledge; for I had not then learned how to estimate the narration of a Highlander.

They faid that a great family had a Bard and a Senachi, who were the poet and hiftorian of the houfe; and an old gentleman told me that he remembered one of each. Here was a dawn of intelligence. Of men that had lived within memory, fome certain knowledge might be attained. Though the office had ceafed, its effects might WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 259 might continue; the poems might be found though there was no poet.

Another conversation indeed informed me, that the fame man was both Bard and Senachi. This variation difcouraged me; but as the practice might be different in different times, or at the fame time in different families, there was yet no reafon for fuppofing that I must necessarily fit down in total ignorance.

Soon after I was told by a gentleman who is generally acknowledged the greatest master of Hebridian antiquities, that there had indeed once been both Bards and Senachies; and that Senachi fignified the man of talk, or of conversation; but that neither Bard nor Senachi had existed for some centuries. I have no reason to suppose it exactly known at what time the custom ceased, nor did it probably cease in all houses at once. But whenever the practice of recitation was difused, the works, whether poetical or historical, perished with the authors; for in those times nothing had been written in the Earse language.

Whether the Man of talk was a historian, whose office was to tell truth, or a storyteller, like those which were in the last century, and perhaps are now among the Iriss, whose trade was only to amuse, it now would be vain to inquire.

Most of the domestick offices were, I believe, hereditary; and probably the laureat of a Clan was always the fon of the last laureat. The history of the race could no otherwise be communicated, or retained; but what genius could be expected in a poet by inheritance?

The nation was wholly illiterate. Neither Bards nor Senachies could write or read; but if they were ignorant, there was no danger danger of detection; they were believed by those whose vanity they flattered.

The recital of genealogies, which has been confidered as very efficacious to the prefervation of a true feries of anceftry, was anciently made, when the heir of the family came to manly age. This practice has never fublifted within time of memory, nor was much credit due to fuch rehearfers, who might obtrude fictitious pedigrees, either to pleafe their mafters, or to hide the deficiency of their own memories.

Where the Chiefs of the Highlands have found the hiftories of their defcent is difficult to tell; for no Earfe genealogy was ever written. In general this only is evident, that the principal house of a clan must be very ancient, and that those must have lived long in a place, of whom it is not known when they came thither.

Thus

Thus hopeless are all attempts to find any traces of Highland learning. Nor are their primitive customs and ancient manner of life otherwise than very faintly and uncertainly remembered by the present race.

The peculiarities which frike the native of a commercial country, proceeded in a great measure from the want of money. To the fervants and dependants that were not domesticks, and if an estimate be made from the capacity of any of their old houses which I have feen, their domefticks could have been but few, were appropriated certain portions of land for their fupport. Macdonald has a piece of ground yet, called the Bards or Senachies field. When a beef was killed for the house, particular parts were claimed as fees by the feveral officers, or workmen. What was the right of each I have not learned. The head belonged to the fmith, and the udder of a cow to the piper;

piper; the weaver had likewife his particular part; and fo many pieces followed these prescriptive claims, that the Laird's was at last but little.

The payment of rent in kind has been fo long difused in England, that it is totally forgotten. It was practifed very lately in the Hebrides, and probably still continues, not only in St. Kilda, where money is not vet known, but in others of the fmaller and remoter Islands. It were perhaps to be defired, that no change in this particular should have been made. When the Laird could only eat the produce of his lands, he was under the necessity of refiding upon them; and when the tenant could not convert his flock into more portable riches, he could never be tempted away from his farm, from the only place where he could be wealthy. Money confounds fubordination, by overpowering the diffinetions of rank and birth, and weakens au-S 4 thority thority by fupplying power of refiftance, or expedients for escape. The feudal fystem is formed for a nation employed in agriculture, and has never long kept its hold where gold and filver have become common.

Their arms were anciently the Glaymore, or great two-handed fword, and afterwards the two-edged fword and target, or buckler, which was fustained on the left arm. In the midst of the target, which was made of wood, covered with leather, and fludded with nails, a flender lance, about two feet long, was fometimes fixed; it was heavy and cumberous, and accordingly has for fome time past been gradually laid aside. Very few targets were at Culloden. The dirk, or broad dagger, I am afraid, was of more use in private quarrels than in battles. The Lochaber-ax is only a flight alteration of the old English bill,

After all that has been faid of the force and terrour of the Highland fword, I could not find that the art of defence was any part of common education. The gentlemen were perhaps sometimes skilful gladiators, but the common men had no other powers than those of violence and courage. Yet it is well known, that the onfet of the Highlanders was very formidable. As an army cannot confift of philosophers, a panick is eafily excited by any unwonted mode of annoyance. New dangers are naturally magnified; and men accuftomed only to exchange bullets at a diftance, and rather to hear their enemies than fee them, are discouraged and amazed when they find themfelves encountered hand to hand, and catch the gleam of fteel flashing in their faces.

The Highland weapons gave opportunity for many exertions of perfonal courage, and fometimes for fingle combats in the

the field; like those which occur to frequently in fabulous wars. At Falkirk, a gentleman now living, was, I suppose after the retreat of the King's troops, engaged at a diftance from the reft with an Irish dragoon. They were both skilful swordsmen, and the contest was not eafily decided: the dragoon at last had the advantage, and the Highlander called for quarter; but quarter was refused him, and the fight continued till he was reduced to defend himfelf upon his knee. At that instant one of the Macleods came to his refcue; who, as it is faid, offered quarter to the dragoon, but he thought himself obliged to reject what he had before refused, and, as battle gives little time to deliberate, was immediately killed.

Funerals were formerly folemnized by calling multitudes together, and entertaining them at great expence. This emulation of useless cost has been for some time discouraged, WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 267 raged, and at last in the life of Sky is almost suppressed.

Of the Earle language, as I understand nothing, I cannot fay more than I have been told. It is the rude speech of a barbarous people, who had few thoughts to express, and were content, as they conceived grofsly, to be grossly understood. After what has been lately talked of Highland Bards, and Highland genius, many will ftartle when they are told, that the Earle never was a written language; that there is not in the world an Earfe manufcript a hundred years old; and that the founds of the Highlanders were never expressed by letters, till fome little books of piety were translated, and a metrical version of the Pfalms was made by the Synod of Argyle. Whoever therefore now writes in this language, fpells according to his own perception of the found, and his own idea of the power power of the letters. The Wel/b and the Irifb are cultivated tongues. The Welfh, two hundred years ago, infulted their Englifb neighbours for the inftability of their Orthography; while the Ear/e merely floated in the breath of the people, and could therefore receive little improvement.

When a language begins to teem with books, it is tending to refinement; as those who undertake to teach others must have undergone fome labour in improving themfelves, they fet a proportionate value on their own thoughts, and wish to enforce them by efficacious expressions; fpeech becomes embodied and permanent; different modes and phrases are compared, and the best obtains an establishment. By degrees one age improves upon another. Exactness is first obtained, and afterwards elegance. But diction, merely vocal, is always in its childhood. As no man leaves his his eloquence behind him, the new generations have all to learn. There may poffibly be books without a polifhed language, but there can be no polifhed language without books.

That the Bards could not read more than the reft of their countrymen, it is reasonable to fuppole; because, if they had read, they could probably have written; and how high their compositions may reasonably be rated, an inquirer may beft judge by confidering what ftores of imagery, what principles of ratiocination, what comprehension of knowledge, and what delicacy of elocution he has known any man attain who cannot read. The flate of the Bards was yet more hopelefs. He that cannot read, may now converse with those that can; but the Bard was a barbarian among barbarians, who, knowing nothing himself, lived with others that knew no more.

There

There has lately been in the Islands one of these illiterate poets, who hearing the Bible read at church, is faid to have turned the facred history into verse. I heard part of a dialogue, composed by him, translated by a young lady in Mull, and thought it had more meaning than I expected from a man totally uneducated; but he had some opportunities of knowledge; he lived among a learned people. After all that has been done for the instruction of the Highlanders, the antipathy between their language and literature still continues; and no man that has learned only Earse is, at this time, able to read.

The Earfe has many dialects, and the words used in some Islands are not always known in others. In literate nations, though the pronunciation, and sometimes the words of common speech may differ, as now in England, compared with the South of Scotland, yet there is a written Q differing, diction, which pervades all dialects, and is underflood in every province. But where the whole language is colloquial, he that has only one part, never gets the reft, as he cannot get it but by change of refidence.

In an unwritten speech, nothing that is not very short is transmitted from one generation to another. Few have opportunities of hearing a long composition often enough to learn it, or have inclination to repeat it so often as is necessary to retain it; and what is once forgotten is loss for ever. I believe there cannot be recovered, in the whole Earse language, five hundred lines of which there is any evidence to prove them a hundred years old. Yet I hear that the father of Offian boasts of two chefts more of ancient poetry, which he suppresses, because they are too good for the English.

He

He that goes into the Highlands with a, mind naturally acquiescent, and a credulity eager for wonders, may come back with an opinion very different from mine; for the inhabitants knowing the ignorance of all ftrangers in their language and antiquities, perhaps are not very scrupulous adherents to truth; yet I do not fay that they deliberately speak studied falsehood, or have a fettled purpose to deceive. They have inquired and confidered little, and do not always feel their own ignorance. They are not much accustomed to be interrogated by others; and feem never to have thought upon interrogating themselves; fo that if they do not know what they tell to be true, they likewife do not diffinctly perceive it to be falle.

Mr. Bofwell was very diligent in his inquiries; and the refult of his investigations was, that the answer to the second question was

WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 273 was commonly fuch as nullified the answer to the first.

We were a while told, that they had an old translation of the fcriptures; and told it till it would appear obftinacy to inquire again. Yet by continued accumulation of questions we found, that the translation meant, if any meaning there were, was nothing elfe than the Iri/b Bible.

We heard of manuscripts that were, or that had been in the hands of somebody's father, or grandfather; but at last we had no reason to believe they were other than Irish. Martin mentions Irish, but never any Earse manuscripts, to be sound in the Islands in his time.

I suppose my opinion of the poems of Offian is already discovered. I believe they never existed in any other form than that which we have seen. The editor, or author, never could shew the original; nor can it be shewn by any other; to revenge T reasonable reafonable incredulity, by refufing evidence, is a degree of infolence, with which the world is not yet acquainted; and flubborn audacity is the laft refuge of guilt. It would be eafy to fhew it if he had it; but whence could it be had? It is too long to be remembered, and the language formerly had nothing written. He has doubtlefs inferted names that circulate in popular flories, and may have translated fome wandering ballads, if any can be found; and the names, and fome of the images being recollected, make an inaccurate auditor imagine, by the help of Caledonian bigotry, that he has formerly heard the whole.

I asked a very learned Minister in Sky, who had used all arts to make me believe the genuineness of the book, whether at last he believed it himself? but he would not answer. He wished me to be deceived, for the honour of his country; but would not directly and formally deceive me. Yet has this man's testimony been WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 275 been publickly produced, as of one that held Fingal to be the work of Offian.

It is faid, that fome men of integrity profess to have heard parts of it, but they all heard them when they were boys; and it never was faid that any of them could tecite fix lines. They remember names, and perhaps fome proverbial fentiments; and, having no diffinct ideas, coin a refemblance without an original. The perfuafion of the Scots, however, is far from universal; and in a question to capable of proof, why should doubt be suffered to continue? The editor has been heard to fay, that part of the poem was received by him, in the Saxon character. He has then found, by fome peculiar fortune, an unwritten language, written in a character which the natives probably never beheld.

I have yet supposed no imposfure but in the publisher; yet I am far from certainty; that fome translations have not been lately T 2 made, made, that may now be obtruded as parts of the original work. Credulity on one part is a ftrong temptation to deceit on the other, especially to deceit of which no perfonal injury is the confequence, and which flatters the author with his own ingenuity. The Scots have fomething to plead for their eafy reception of an improbable fiction: they are feduced by their fondness for their fupposed ancestors. A Scotchman must be a very sturdy moralist, who does not love Scotland better than truth; he will always love it better than inquiry; and if falschood flatters his vanity, will not be very diligent to detect it. Neither ought the English to be much influenced by Scotch authority; for of the past and present state of the whole Earle nation, the Lowlanders are at least as ignorant as ourselves. To be ignorant is painful; but it is dangerous to quiet our uneafiness by the delusive opiate of hafty perfuafion.

But

But this is the age in which those who could not read, have been supposed to write; in which the giants of antiquated romance have been exhibited as realities. If we know little of the ancient Highlanders, let us not fill the vacuity with Offian. If we have not fearched the Magellanick regions, let us however forbear to people them with Patagons.

Having waited fome days at Armidel, we were flattered at last with a wind that promised to convey us to Mull. We went on board a boat that was taking in kelp, and left the Isle of Sky behind us. We were doomed to experience, like others, the danger of trufting to the wind, which blew against us, in a short time, with fuch violence, that we, being no feafoned failors, were willing to call it a tempeft, I was fea-fick and lay down. Mr. Bofwell kept the deck. The master knew not well whither to go; and our difficulties might perhaps have filled a very pathetick page, T 3 had had not Mr. Maclean of Col, who, with every other qualification which infular life requires, is a very active and fkilful mariner, piloted us fafe into his own harbour.

C O L.

In the morning we found ourfelves under the Ifle of Col, where we landed; and paffed the first day and night with Captain Mackan, a gentleman who has lived fome time in the East Indies; but having dethroned no Nabob, is not too rich to fettle in his own country.

Next day the wind was fair, and we might have had an eafy paffage to Mull; but having, contrarily to our own intention, landed upon a new Ifland, we would not leave it wholly unexamined. We therefore fuffered the veffel to depart without us, and trufted the fkies for another wind.

Mr. Maclean of Col, having a very numerout family, has, for some time past, refided refided at Aberdeen, that he may fuperintend their education, and leaves the young gentleman, our friend, to govern his dominions, with the full power of a Highland Chief. By the absence of the Laird's family, our entertainment was made more difficult, because the house was in a great degree disfurnished; but young Col's kindness and activity supplied all defects, and procured us more than sufficient accommodation.

Here I first mounted a little Highland steed; and if there had been many spectators, should have been somewhat assamed of my figure in the march. The horses of the Islands, as of other barren countries, are very low: they are indeed musculous and strong, beyond what their size gives reason for expecting; but a bulky man upon one of their backs makes a very disproportionate appearance.

g80 A JOURNEY TO THE

From the habitation of Captain Maclean, we went to Griffipol, but called by the way on Mr. Hector Maclean, the Minister of Col, whom we found in a hut, that is, a house of only one floor, but with windows and chimney, and not inelegantly furnished. Mr. Maclean has the reputation of great learning: he is seventy-seven years old, but not infirm, with a look of venerable dignity, excelling what I remember in any other man.

His conversation was not unfuitable to his appearance. I loft fome of his goodwill, by treating a heretical writer with more regard than, in his opinion, a heretick could deferve. I honoured his orthodoxy, and did not much cenfure his afperity. A man who has fettled his opinions, does not love to have the tranquillity of his conviction diffurbed; and at feventy-feven it is time to be in earneft.

Men-

Mention was made of the Earfe translation of the New Testament, which has been lately published, and of which the learned Mr. Macqueen of Sky spoke with commendation; but Mr. Maclean said he did not use it, because he could make the text more intelligible to his auditors by an extemporary version. From this I inferred, that the language of the translation was not the language of the Isle of Col.

He has no publick edifice for the exercife of his ministry; and can officiate to no greater number, than a room can contain; and the room of a hut is not very large. This is all the opportunity of worship that is now granted to the inhabitants of the Island, fome of whom must travel thither perhaps ten miles. Two chapels were erected by their ancestors, of which I faw the skeletons, which now stand faithful witnesses of the triumph of Reformation.

The

The want of churches is not the only impediment to piety: there is likewife a want of Ministers. A parish often contains more Islands than one; and each Island can have the Minister only in its own turn. At Raa/a they had, I think, a right to fervice only every third Sunday. All the provision made by the prefent ecclefiaffical conftitution, for the inhabitants of about a hundred square miles, is a prayer and fermon in a little room, once in three weeks: and even this parfimonious distribution is at the mercy of the weather: and in those Islands where the Minister does not refide, it is impoffible to tell how many weeks or months may pass without any publick exercise of religion.

GRISSIPOL IN COL.

After a fhort conversation with Mr. Maclean, we went on to Grisspol, a house and farm tenanted by Mr. Macsweyn, where I saw faw more of the ancient life of a High-lander, than I had yet found. Mrs. Mac-fweyn could fpeak no English, and had never feen any other places than the Iflands of Sky, Mull, and Col: but fhe was hofpi-table and good-humoured, and fpread her.

table with fufficient liberality. We found tea here, as in every other place, but our fpoons were of horn.

The house of Griffipol stands by a brook very clear and quick; which is, I suppose, one of the most copious streams in the Island. This place was the scene of an action, much celebrated in the traditional history of Col, but which probably no two relaters will tell alike.

Some time, in the obfcure ages, Macneil of Barra married the Lady Maclean, who had the Ifle of Col for her jointure. Whether Macneil detained Col, when the widow was dead, or whether the lived fo long long as to make her heirs impatient, is perhaps not now known. The younger fon. called John Gerves, or John the Giant, a man of great ftrength, who was then in Ireland, either for fafety, or for education, dreamed of recovering his inheritance; and getting fome adventurers together, which in those unfettled times was not hard to do, invaded Col. He was driven away, but was not discouraged, and collecting new followers, in three years came again with fifty men. In his way he ftopped at Artorinish in Morvern, where his uncle was prifoner to Macleod, and was then with his enemies in a tent. Maclean took with him only one fervant, whom he ordered to flay at the outfide; and where he should see the tent pressed outwards, to ftrike with his dirk; it being the intention of Maclean, as any man provoked him, to lay hands upon him, and push him back. He entered the tent alone, with his Lochabar-axe in his hand, and Aruck fuch terror into

WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 285 into the whole affembly, that they difmiffed his uncle.

When he landed at Col, he faw the fentinel, who kept watch towards the fea, running off to Griffipol, to give Macneil, who was there with a hundred and twenty men, an account of the invation. He told Macgill, one of his followers, that if he intercepted that dangerous intelligence, by catching the courier, he would give him certain lands in Mull. Upon this promife, Macgill purfued the meffenger, and either killed, or ftopped him; and his pofterity, till very lately, held the lands in Mull.

The alarm being thus prevented, he came unexpectedly upon Macneil. Chiefs were in those days never wholly unprovided for an enemy. A fight ensued, in which one of their followers is faid to have given an extraordinary proof of activity, by bounding ing backwards over the brook of Griffipol. Macneil being killed, and many of his clan destroyed, Maclean took possifient of the Island, which the Macneils attempted to conquer by another invasion, but were defeated and repulsed.

Maclean, in his turn, invaded the effate of the Macneils, took the caftle of Brecacig, and conquered the Isle of Barra, which he held for seven years, and then restored it to the heirs.

CASTLE of COL.

From Griffipol, Mr. Maclean conducted us to his father's feat; a neat new houfe, erected near the old caftle, I think, by the laft proprietor. Here we were allowed to take our flation, and lived very commodioufly, while we waited for moderate weather and a fair wind, which we did not fo foon obtain, but we had time to get fome fome information of the prefent state of Col, partly by inquiry, and partly by occafional excursions.

Col is computed to be thirteen miles in length, and three in breadth. Both the ends are the property of the Duke of Argyle, but the middle belongs to Maclean, who is called Col, as the only Laird.

Col is not properly rocky; it is rather one continued rock, of a furface much diversified with protuberances, and covered with a thin layer of earth, which is often broken, and discovers the stone. Such a solid is not for plants that strike deep roots; and perhaps in the whole Island nothing has ever yet grown to the height of a table. The uncultivated parts are clothed with heath, among which industry has interspersed spots of grass and corn; but no attempt has yet been made to raise a tree. Young Col, who has a very laudable defire of of improving his patrimony, purpoles fome time to plant an orchard; which, if it be fheltered by a wall, may perhaps fucceed. He has introduced the culture of turnips, of which he has a field, where the whole work was performed by his own hand. His intention is to provide food for his cattle in the winter. This innovation was confidered by Mr. Macfweyn as the idle project of a young head, heated with Englifb fancies; but he has now found that turnips will really grow, and that hungry fheep and cows will really eat them.

By fuch acquifitions as thefe, the He-brides may in time rife above their annual diffrefs. Wherever heath will grow, there is reafon to think fomething better may draw nourifhment; and by trying the production of other places, plants will be found fuitable to every foil.

Col has many lochs, fome of which have trouts and eels, and others have never yet 13 been been stocked; another proof of the negligence of the Islanders, who might take fish in the inland waters, when they cannot go to sea.

Their quadrupeds are horfes, cows, fheep, and goats. They have neither deer, hares, nor rabbits. They have no vermin, except rats, which have been lately brought thither by fea, as to other places; and are free from ferpents, frogs, and toads.

The harveft in Col, and in Lewis, is ripe fooner than in Sky, and the winter in Col is never cold, but very tempeftuous. I know not that I ever heard the wind fo loud in any other place; and Mr. Bofwell obferved, that its noife was all its own, for there were no trees to increase it.

Noife is not the worft effect of the tempefts; for they have thrown the fand from the fhore over a confiderable part of the U land; land; and it is faid still to encroach and deftroy more and more pasture; but I am. not of opinion, that by any furveys or land-marks, its limits have been ever fixed, or its progression ascertained. If one man has confidence enough to fay, that it advances, nobody can bring any proof to fupport him in denying it. The reafon why it is not fpread to a greater extent, feems to be, that the wind and rain come almost together, and that it is made close and heavy by the wet before the ftorms can put it in motion. So thick is the bed, and fo fmall the particles, that if a traveller fhould be caught by a fudden guft in dry weather, he would find it very difficult to escape with life.

For natural curiofities, I was shown only two great masses of stone, which lie loose upon the ground; one on the top of a hill, and the other at a small distance from the bottom. They certainly were never put 12 into into their prefent places by human ftrength or skill; and though an earthquake might have broken off the lower stone, and rolled it into the valley, no account can be given of the other, which lies on the hill, unlefs, which I forgot to examine, there be still near it fome higher rock, from which it might be torn. All nations have a tradition, that their earliest ancestors were giants, and these stones are faid to have been thrown up and down by a giant and his mistres. There are fo many more important things, of which human knowledge can give no account, that it may be forgiven us, if we speculate no longer on two ftones in Cal.

This Island is very populous. About nine-and-twenty years ago, the fencible men of Col were reckoned one hundred and forty, which is the fixth of eight hundred and forty; and probably fome contrived to be left out of the lift. The Minister told us, U 2 that that a few years ago the inhabitants were eight hundred, between the ages of feven and of feventy. Round numbers are feldom exact. But in this cafe the authority is good, and the errour likely to be little. If to the eight hundred be added what the laws of computation require, they will be increased to at least a thousand; and if the dimensions of the country have been accurately related, every mile maintains more than twenty-five.

This proportion of habitation is greater than the appearance of the country feems to admit; for wherever the eye wanders, it feems much wafte and little cultivation. I am more inclined to extend the land, of which no meafure has ever been taken, than to diminish the people, who have been really numbered. Let it be supposed, that a computed mile contains a mile and a half, as was commonly found true in the menfuration of the English roads, and we shall then WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 293 then allot nearly twelve to a mile, which agrees much better with ocular observation.

Here as in Sky and other Islands, are the Laird, the Tacksmen, and the undertenants.

Mr. Maclean, the Laird, has very extensive possession, being proprietor, not only of far the greater part of Col, but of the extensive Island of Rum, and a very confiderable territory in Mull.

Rum is one of the larger Islands, almost fquare, and therefore of great capacity in proportion to its fides. By the usual method of estimating computed extent, it may contain more than a hundred and twenty fquare miles,

It originally belonged to Clanronald, and was purchased by Col; who, in fome dif-U 3 pute pute about the bargain, made Clanronald prifoner, and kept him nine months in confinement. Its owner reprefents it as mountainous, rugged, and barren. In the hills there are red deer. The horfes are very fmall, but of a breed eminent for beauty. Col, not long ago, bought one of them from a tenant; who told him, that as he was of a fhape uncommonly elegant, he could not fell him but at a high price; and that whoever had him fhould pay a guinea and a half.

There are faid to be in Barra, a race of horfes yet fmaller, of which the higheft is not above thirty-fix inches.

The rent of Rum is not great. Mr. Maclean declared, that he fhould be very rich if he could fet his land at two pence halfpenny an acre. The inhabitants are fifty-eight families, who continued Papifts for fome time after the Laird became a Proteftant.

teftant. Their adherence to their old religion was ftrengthened by the countenance of the Laird's fifter, a zealous Romanift, till one Sunday, as they were going to mais under the conduct of their patronels, Maclean met them on the way, gave one of them a blow on the head with a yellow flick, I fuppole a cane, for which the Earle had no name, and drove them to the kirk, from which they have never fince departed. Since the use of this method of conversion, the inhabitants of Egg and Canna, who continue Papifts, call the Protestantism of Rum, the religion of the Yellow Stick.

The only Popish Islands are Egg and Canna. Egg is the principal Island of a parish, in which, though he has no congregation, the Protestant Minister refides. I have heard of nothing curious in it, but the cave in which a former generation of the Islanders were smothered by Macleod.

If

If we had travelled with more leifure, it had not been fit to have neglected the Popifh Iflands. Popery is favourable to ceremony; and among ignorant nations, ceremony is the only prefervative of tradition. Since Proteftantifm was extended to the favage parts of Scotland, it has perhaps been one of the chief labours of the Minifters to abolifh flated obfervances, becaufe they continued the remembrance of the former religion. We therefore who came to hear old traditions, and fee antiquated manners, fhould probably have found them amongft the Papifts.

Canna, the other Popifh Island, belongs to Clanronald. It is faid not to comprise more than twelve miles of land, and yet maintains as many inhabitants as Rum.

We were at Col under the protection of the young Laird, without any of the diftreffes, which Mr. Pennant, in a fit of fimple ple credulity, feems to think almost worthy of an elegy by Offian. Wherever we roved, we were pleafed to fee the reverence with which his subjects regarded him. He did not endeavour to dazzle them by any magnificence of drefs : his only diffinction was a feather in his bonnet; but as foon as he appeared, they forfook their work and cluftered about him: he took them by the hand, and they feemed mutually delighted. He has the proper difposition of a Chieftain, and feems defirous to continue the cuftoms of his house. The bagpiper played regularly, when dinner was ferved, whole perfon and drefs made a good appearance; and he brought no difgrace upon the family of Rankin, which has long fupplied the Lairds of Col with hereditary mulick.

The Tackimen of Col feem to live with lefs dignity and convenience than those of Sky; where they had good houses, and tables not only plentiful, but delicate. In Col

Col only two houses pay the window-tax; for only two have fix windows, which, I suppose, are the Laird's and Mr. Macsweyn's.

The rents have, till within feven years, been paid in kind, but the tenants finding that cattle and corn varied in their price, defired for the future to give their landlord money; which, not having yet arrived at the philosophy of commerce, they confider as being every year of the fame value.

We were told of a particular mode of undertenure. The Tacksman admits fome of his inferior neighbours to the cultivation of his grounds, on condition that performing all the work, and giving a third part of the feed, they shall keep a certain number of cows, sheep, and goats, and reap a third part of the harvest. Thus by less than the tillage of two acres they pay the rent of one.

There

There are tenants below the rank of Tackfmen, that have got fmaller tenants under them; for in every place, where money is not the general equivalent, there must be fome whose labour is immediately paid by daily food.

A country that has no money, is by no means convenient for beggars, both becaufe fuch countries are commonly poor, and becaufe charity requires fome trouble and fome thought. A penny is eafily given upon the firft impulfe of compaffion, or impatience of importunity; but few will deliberately fearch their cupboards or their granaries to find out fomething to give. A penny is likewife eafily fpent; but victuals, if they are unprepared, require houseroom, and fire, and utenfils, which the beggar knows not where to find,

Yet beggars there fometimes are, who wander from Island to Island. We had, in in our paffage to Mull, the company of a woman and her child, who had exhausted the charity of Col. The arrival of a beggar on an Island is accounted a finistrous event. Every body confiders that he shall have the less for what he gives away. Their alms, I believe, is generally oatmeal.

Near to Col is another Island called Tireye, eminent for its fertility. Though it has but half the extent of Rum, it is fo well peopled, that there have appeared, not long ago, nine hundred and fourteen at a funeral. The plenty of this Island enticed beggars to it, who feemed fo burthenfome to the inhabitants, that a formal compact was drawn up, by which they obliged themfelves to grant no more relief to cafual wanderers, because they had among them an indigent woman of high birth, whom they confidered as entitled to all that they could fpare. I have read the ftipulation, which which was indited with juridical formality, but was never made valid by regular fubfcription.

If the inhabitants of Col have nothing to give, it is not that they are opprefied by their landlord: their leafes feem to be very profitable. One farmer, who pays only feven pounds a year, has maintained feven daughters and three fons, of whom the eldeft is educated at Aberdeen for the miniftry; and now, at every vacation, opens a fchool in Col.

Life is here, in fome refpects, improved beyond the condition of fome other Iflands. In Sky what is wanted can only be bought, as the arrival of fome wandering pedlar may 'afford an opportunity; but in Col there is a ftanding fhop, and in Mull there are two. A fhop in the Iflands, as in other places of little frequentation, is a repofitory of every thing requifite for common ufe. Mr. Bofwell's

Bofwell's journal was filled, and he bought fome paper in Col. To a man that ranges the firects of London, where he is tempted to contrive wants for the pleafure of fupplying them, a fhop affords no image worthy of attention; but in an Ifland, it turns the balance of existence between good and evil. To live in perpetual want of lirtle things, is a flate not indeed of torture, but of constant vexation. I have in Sky had fome difficulty to find ink for a letter; and if a woman breaks her needle, the work is at a ftop.

As it is, the Islanders are obliged to content themselves with fuccedaneous means for many common purposes. I have seen the chief man of a very wide district riding with a halter for a bridle, and governing his hobby with a wooden curb.

The people of Col, however, do not want dexterity to fupply fome of their neceffities.

neceffities. Several arts which make trades, and demand apprentices in great cities, are here the practices of daily economy. In every house candles are made, both moulded and dipped. Their wicks are small shreds of linen cloth. They all know how to extract from the Cuddy, oil for their lamps. They all tan skins, and make brogues.

As we travelled through Sky, we faw many cottages, but they very frequently flood fingle on the naked ground. In Col, where the hills opened a place convenient for habitation, we found a petty village of which every hut had a little garden adjoining; thus they made an appearance of focial commerce and mutual offices, and of fomeattention to convenience and future fupply. There is not in the Weftern Iflands any collection of buildings that can make pretenfions to be called a town, except in the Ifle of Lewis, which I have not feen.

If

If Lewis is diffinguished by a town, Col has also fomething peculiar. The young Laird has attempted what no Islander perhaps ever thought on. He has begun a road capable of a wheel-carriage. He has carried it about a mile, and will continue it by annual elongation from his house to the harbour.

Of taxes here is no reason for complaining; they are paid by a very easy composition. The malt-tax for Col is twenty fhillings. Whifky is very plentiful: there are feveral stills in the Island, and more is made than the inhabitants confume.

The great bufine's of infular policy is now to keep the people in their own country. As the world has been let in upon them, they have heard of happier climates, and lefs arbitrary government; and if they are difgusted, have emissaries among them ready to offer them land and houses, as a reward reward for deferting their Chief and Clan. Many have departed both from the main of Scotland, and from the Illands; and all that go may be confidered as fubjects loft to the Briti/b crown; for a nation fcattered in the boundles regions of America refembles rays diverging from a focus. All the rays remain, but the heat is gone. Their power confisted in their concentration: when they are dispersed they have no effect.

It may be thought that they are happier by the change; but they are not happy as a nation, for they are a nation no longer. As they contribute not to the prosperity of any community, they must want that fecurity, that dignity, that happines, whatever it be, which a prosperous community throws back upon individuals.

The inhabitants of Col have not yet learned to be weary of their heath and X rocks, rocks, but attend their agriculture and their dairies, without liftening to American feducements.

There are fome however who think that this emigration has raifed terrour difproportionate to its real evil; and that it is only a new mode of doing what was always done. The Highlands, they fay, never maintained their natural inhabitants; but the people, when they found themfelves too numerous, instead of extending cultivation, provided for themfelves by a more compendious method, and fought better fortune in other countries. They did not indeed go away in collective bodies, but withdrew invifibly, a few at a time; but the whole number of fugitives was not lefs, and the difference between other times and this, is only the fame as between evaporation and effusion.

This is plaufible, but I am afraid it is not true. Thole who went before, if they were were not fenfibly miffed, as the argument fupposes, must have gone either in less number, or in a manner lefs detrimental, than at prefent; because formerly there was no complaint. Those who then left the country were generally the idle dependants on overburdened families, or men who had no property; and therefore carried away only themselves. In the present eagerness of emigration, families, and almost communities, go away together. Those who were confidered as prosperous and wealthy fell their flock and carry away the money. Once none went away but the ufeless and poor; in fome parts there is now reafon to fear, that none will flay but those who are too poor to remove themfelves, and too useless to be removed at the cost of others.

Of antiquity there is not more knowledge in Col than in other places; but every where fomething may be gleaned.

How

How ladies were portioned, when there was no money, it would be difficult for an Englifkman to guefs. In 1649, Maclean of Dronart in Mull married his fifter *Fin*gala to Maclean of Col, with a hundred and eighty kine; and flipulated, that if fhe became a widow, her jointure fhould be three hundred and fixty. I fuppofe fome proportionate tract of land was appropriated to their pafturage.

The difposition to pompous and expensive funerals, which has at one time or other prevailed in most parts of the civilized world, is not yet suppressed in the Islands, though some of the ancient solemnities are worn away, and singers are no longer hired to attend the procession. Nineteen years ago, at the burial of the Laird of Col, were killed thirty cows, and about fifty sheep. The number of the cows is positively told, and we must suppose other victuals in like proportion.

Mr. Maclean informed us of an odd game, of which he did not tell the original, but which may perhaps be used in other places, where the reason of it is not yet forgot. At New-year's eve, in the hall or caftle of the Laird, where, at feftal feafons, there may be supposed a very numerous company, one man dreffes himfelf in a cow's hide, upon which other men beat with flicks. He runs with all this noife round the house, which all the company quits in a counterfeited fright: the door is then fhut. At New-year's eve there is no great pleafure to be had out of doors in the Hebrides. They are fure foon to recover from their terrour enough to folicit for re-admiffion; which, for the honour of poetry, is not to be obtained but by repeating a verfe, with which those that are knowing and provident take care to be furnished.

Very

Very near the house of Maclean stands the castle of Col, which was the mansion of the Laird, till the house was built. It is built upon a rock, as Mr. Bofwell remarked, that it mightonot be mined. It is very strong, and having been not long uninhabited, is yet in repair. On the wall was, not long ago, a stone with an infeription, importing, that if any man of the Clan. of Maclonich shall appear before this castle, though be come at midnight, with a man's bead in his band, be shall there find safety and protection against all but the King.

This is an old Highland treaty made upon a very memorable occasion. Maclean, the fon of John Gerves, who recovered Col, and conquered Barra, had obtained, it is faid, from James the Second, a grant of the lands of Lochiel, forfeited, I suppose, by some offence against the state.

Forfeited

Forfeited estates were not in those days quietly refigned; Maclean, therefore, went with an armed force to seize his new posfeffions, and, I know not for what reason, took his wife with him. The Camerons rose in defence of their Chief, and a battle was fought at the head of Loch Nefs, near the place where Fort Augustus now stands, in which Lochiel obtained the victory, and Maclean, with his followers, was defeated and destroyed.

The lady fell into the hands of the conquerors, and being found pregnant, was placed in the cuftody of Maclonich, one of a tribe or family branched from Cameron, with orders, if the brought a boy, to deftroy him, if a girl, to fpare her.

Maclonich's wife, who was with child likewife, had a girl about the fame time at which lady Maclean brought a boy, and Maclonich with more generofity to his cap-X 4 tive, tive, than fidelity to his truft, contrived that the children fhould be changed.

Maclean being thus preferved from death, in time recovered his original patrimony; and in gratitude to his friend, made his caftle a place of refuge to any of the Clan that fhould think himfelf in danger; and as a proof of reciprocal confidence, Maclean took upon himfelf and his posterity the care of educating the heir of Maclonicb.

This ftory, like all other traditions of the Highlands, is varioufly related; but though fome circumftances are uncertain, the principal fact is true. Maclean undoubtedly owed his prefervation to Maclenicb; for the treaty between the two families has been ftrictly obferved: it did not fink into difufe and oblivion, but continued in its full force while the chieftains retained their power. I have read a demand of protection, made not more than thirty-feven years years ago, for one of the Maclonichs, named Ewen Cameron, who had been acceffory to the death of Macmartin, and had been banished by Lochiel, his lord, for a certain term; at the expiration of \cdot which he returned married from France; but the Macmartins, not fatisfied with the punishment, when he attempted to fettle, still threatened him with vengeance. He therefore asked, and obtained shelter in the Isle of Col.

The power of protection fubfifts no longer; but what the law permits is yet continued, and Maclean of Col now educates the heir of Maclonich.

There still remains in the Islands, though it is passing fast away, the custom of fosterage. A Laird, a man of wealth and eminence, fends his child, either male or female, to a tacksman, or tenant, to be fostered. It is not always his own tenant, but some distant distant friend that obtains this honour; for an honour fuch a truft is very reafonably thought. The terms of fosterage feem to vary in different islands. In Mull the father fends with his child a certain number of cows, to which the fame number is added by the fofterer. The father appropriates a proportionable extent of ground, without rent, for their pasturage. If every cow brings a calf, half belongs to the fofterer, and half to the child; but if there be only one calf between two cows, it is the child's, and when the child returns to the parents, it is accompanied by all the cows given, both by the father and by the fosterer, with half of the increase of the flock by propagation. These beafts are confidered as a portion, and called Macalive cattle, of which the father has the produce, but is supposed not to have the full property, but to owe the fame number to the child, as a portion to the daughter, or a flock for the fon.

Children

Children continue with the fosterer perhaps fix years, and cannot, where this is the practice, be confidered as burdenfome. The fosterer, if he gives four cows, receives likewife four, and has, while the child continues with him, grafs for eight without rent, with half the calves, and all the milk, for which he pays only four cows when he difmiffes his Dalt, for that is the name for a foster child.

Fosterage is, I believe, fometimes performed upon more liberal terms. Our friend, the young Laird of Col, was fostered by Macfweyn of Griffipol. Macfweyn then lived a tenant to Sir James Macdonald in the lfle of Sky: and therefore Col, whether he fent him cattle or not, could grant him no land. The Dalt, however, at his return, brought back a confiderable number of Macalive cattle, and of the friendship fo formed there have been good effects. When Macdonald raised his 8 rents, rents, Macfweyn was, like other tenants, discontented, and, refigning his farm, removed from Sky to Col, and was established at Griffipol.

These observations we made by favour of the contrary wind that drove us to Col, an Island not often visited; for there is not much to amuse curiosity, or to attract avarice.

The ground has been hitherto, I believe, ufed chiefly for pafturage. In a diftrict, fuch as the eye can command, there is a general herdfman, who knows all the cattle of the neighbourhood, and whofe flation is upon a hill, from which he furveys the lower grounds; and if one man's cattle invade another's grafs, drives them back to their own borders. But other means of profit begin to be found; kelp is gathered and burnt, and floops are loaded with the concreted afhes. Cultivation is likely to be improved by the fkill and encouragement WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 317 couragement of the prefent heir, and the inhabitants of those obscure vallies will partake of the general progress of life.

The rents of the parts which belong to the Duke of Argyle, have been raifed from fifty-five to one hundred and five pounds, whether from the land or the fea I cannot tell. The bounties of the fea have lately been fo great, that a farm in Southuift has rifen in ten years from a rent of thirty pounds to one hundred and eighty.

He who lives in Col, and finds himfelf condemned to folitary meals, and incommunicable reflection, will find the ufefulnefs of that middle order of Tackfmen, which fome who applaud their own wifdom are wifhing to deftroy. Without intelligence man is not focial, he is only gregarious; and little intelligence will there be, where all are conftrained to daily labour, and every mind muft wait upon the hand.

After

After having liftened for fome days to the tempeft, and wandered about the Ifland till our curiofity was fatisfied, we began to think about our departure. To leave Col in October was not very eafy. We however found a floop which lay on the coaft to carry kelp; and for a price which we thought levied upon our neceffities, the mafter agreed to carry us to Mull, whence we might readily pafs back to Scotland.

MULL.

As we were to catch the first favourable breath, we spent the night not very elegantly nor pleasantly in the vessel, and were landed next day at Tobor Morar, a port in Mull, which appears to an unexperienced eye formed for the security of ships; for its mouth is closed by a small island, which admits them through narrow channels into a bason sufficiently capacious. They are indeed fase from the sea, but there there is a hollow between the mountains, through which the wind iffues from the land with very mifchievous violence.

There was no danger while we were there, and we found feveral other veffels at anchor; fo that the port had a very commercial appearance.

The young Laird of Col, who had determined not to let us lofe his company, while there was any difficulty remaining, came over with us. His influence foon appeared; for he procured us horfes, and conducted us to the houfe of Doctor Macclean, where we found very kind entertainment, and very pleafing converfation.' Mifs Maclean, who was born, and had been bred at Glafgow, having removed with her father to Mull, added to other qualifications, a great knowledge of the Earfe language, which fhe had not learned in her childhood, but gained by ftudy, and was the only interpreter of Earfe poetry that I could ever find.

The life of Mull is perhaps in extent the third of the Hebrides. It is not broken by waters, nor fhot into promontories, but is a folid and compact mass, of breadth nearly equal to its length. Of the dimenfions of the larger Islands, there is no knowledge approaching to exactness. I am willing to estimate it as containing about three hundred square miles.

Mull had fuffered like Sky by the black winter of feventy-one, in which, contrary to all experience, a continued froft detained the fnow eight weeks upon the ground. Against a calamity never known, no provifion had been made, and the people could only pine in helples misery. One tenant was mentioned, whose cattle perished to the value of three hundred pounds; a loss which probably more than the life of man is is neceffary to repair. In countries like these, the descriptions of famine become intelligible. Where by vigorous and artful cultivation of a foil naturally fertile, there is commonly a fuperfluous growth both of grain and grafs; where the fields are crowded with cattle; and where every hand is able to attract wealth from a diflance, by making fomething that promotes eafe, or gratifies vanity, a dear year produces only a comparative want, which is rather feen than felt, and which terminates commonly in no worfe effect, than that of condomning the lower orders of the community to facrifice a little luxury to convenience, or at most a little convenience to neceffity.

But where the climate is unkind, and the ground penurious, fo that the most fruitful years produce only enough to maintain themselves; where life unimproved, and unadorned, fades into fomething little Y more more than naked existence, and every one is bufy for himfelf, without any arts by which the pleafure of others may be increased; if to the daily burden of distress any additional weight be added, nothing remains but to despair and die. In Mull the disappointment of a harvest, or a murrain among the cattle, cuts off the regular provision; and they who have no manufactures can purchase no part of the fuperfluities of other countries. The confequence of a bad feason is here not fcarcity, but emptines; and they whole plenty was barely a fupply of natural and prefent need, when that flender flock fails, must perifh with hunger.

All travel has its advantages. If the paffenger visits better countries, he may learn to improve his own, and if fortune carries him to worse, he may learn to enjoy it.

Mr. Bofwell's curiofity ftrongly impelled him to furvey Iona, or Icolmkill, which was to the early ages the great fchool of Theology, and is supposed to have been the place of sepulture for the ancient kings. -I, though less eager, did not oppose him.

That we might perform this expedition, it was neceffary to traverfe a great part of Mull. We paffed a day at Dr. Maclean's, and could have been well contented to ftay longer. But Col provided us horfes, and we purfued our journey. This was a day of inconvenience, for the country is very rough, and my horfe was but little. We travelled many hours through a tract, black and barren, in which, however, there were the reliques of humanity; for we found a ruined chapel in our way.

It is natural, in traverling this gloom of defolation, to inquire, whether fomething may not be done to give Nature a more cheerful face, and whether those hills and moors that afford heath cannot with a little care and labour bear fomething better? The first thought that occurs is to cover - them with trees, for that in many of these naked regions trees will grow, is evident, because stumps and roots are yet remaining; and the speculatist hastily proceeds to censure that negligence and laziness that has omitted for so long a time so easy an improvement.

To drop feeds into the ground, and attend their growth, requires little labour and no fkill. He who remembers that all the woods, by which the wants of man have been fupplied from, the Deluge till now, were felf-fown, will not eafily be perfuaded to think all the art and preparation neceffary which the Georgick writers prefcribe to planters. Trees certainly have covered the earth with very little culture. They wave their tops among the rocks of Norway, and might thrive as well in the Highlands and Hebrides.

But

But there is a frightful interval between the feed and timber. He that calculates the growth of trees, has the unwelcome remembrance of the shortness of life driven hard upon him. He knows that he is doing what will never benefit himfelf; and when he rejoices to fee the ftem rife, is difposed to repine that another shall cut it down.

Plantation is naturally the employment of a mind unburdened with care, and vacant to futurity, faturated with prefent good, and at leifure to derive gratification from the prospect of posterity. He that pines with hunger, is in little care how others shall be fed. The poor man is feldom studious to make his grandfon rich. It may be foon difcovered, why in a place, which hardly supplies the cravings of neceffity; there has been little attention to the delights of fancy, and why distant convenience is unregarded, where the thoughts are are turned with inceffant folicitude upon every poffibility of immediate advantage.

Neither is it quite fo eafy to raife large woods, as may be conceived. Trees intended to produce timber must be fown where they are to grow; and ground fown with trees must be kept useles for a long time, inclosed at an expence from which many will be difcouraged by the remotenels of the profit, and watched with that attention, which, in places where it is most needed, will neither be given nor bought. That it cannot be plowed is evident; and if cattle be fuffered to graze upon it, they will devour the plants as fast as they rife. Even in coarfer countries, where herds and flocks are not fed, not only the deer and the wild goats will browfe upon them, but the hare and rabbit will nibble them. It is therefore reasonable to believe, what I do not remember any naturalist to have remarked, that there was a time when the world was very very thinly inhabited by beafts, as well as men, and that the woods had leifure to rife high before animals had bred numbers fufficient to intercept them.

Sir James Macdonald, in part of the waftes of his territory, fet or fowed trees, to the number, as I have been told, of feveral millions, expecting, doubtlefs, that they would grow up into future navies and cities; but for want of inclofure, and of that care which is always neceffary, and will hardly ever be taken, all his coft and labour have been loft, and the ground is likely to continue an ufelefs heath.

Having not any experience of a journey in Mull, we had no doubt of reaching the fea by day-light, and therefore had not left Dr. Maclean's very early. We travelled diligently enough, but found the country, for road there was none, very difficult to pafs. We were always ftruggling with Y 4 fome fome obstruction or other, and our vexation was not balanced by any gratification of the eye or mind. We were now long enough acquainted with hills and heath to have loft the emotion that they once raifed, whether pleafing or painful, and had our mind employed only on our own fatigue. We were however fure, under Col's protection, of escaping all real evils. There was no house in Mull to which he could not introduce us. He had intended to lodge us, for that night, with a gentleman that lived upon the coaft, but discovered on the way, that he then lay in bed without, hope of life.

We refolved not to embarrafs a family, in a time of fo much forrow, if any other expedient could be found; and as the Ifland of Ulva was over-against us, it was determined that we should pass the strait and have recours to the Laird, who, like the other gentlemen of the Islands, was known to WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 329 to Col. We expected to find a ferry-boat, but when at last we came to the water, the boat was gone.

We were now again at a ftop. It was the fixteenth of October, a time when it is not convenient to fleep in the Hebrides without a cover, and there was no houfe within our reach, but that which we had already declined.

ULVA.

While we flood deliberating, we were happily efpied from an Irifb fhip, that lay at anchor in the flrait. The mafter faw that we wanted a paffage, and with great civility fent us his boat, which quickly conveyed us to Ulva, where we were very liberally entertained by Mr. Macquarry.

To Ulva we came in the dark, and left it before noon the next day. A very exact defcription defcription therefore will not be expected. We were told, that it is an Island of no great extent, rough and barren, inhabited by the Macquarrys; a Clan not powerful nor numerous, but of antiquity, which most other families are content to reverence. The name is fupposed to be a depravation of fome other; for the Earfe language does not afford it any etymology. Macquarry is proprietor both of Ulva and fome adjacent Islands, among which is Staffa, fo lately raised to renown by Mr. Banks.

When the Islanders were reproached with their ignorance, or infenfibility of the wonders of Staffa, they had not much to reply. They had indeed confidered it little, becaufe they had always feen it; and none but philosophers, nor they always, are flruck with wonder, otherwise than by novelty. How would it furprise an unenlightened ploughman, to hear a company of WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 331 of fober men, inquiring by what power the hand toffes a flone, or why the flone, when it is toffed, falls to the ground !

Of the ancestors of Macquarry, who thus lies hid in his unfrequented Island, I have found memorials in all places where they could be expected.

Inquiring after the reliques of former manners, I found that in Ulva, and, I think, no where elfe, is continued the payment of the Mercheta Mulierum; a fine in old times due to the Laird at the marriage of a virgin. The original of this claim, as of our tenure of Borough English, is varioufly delivered. It is pleasant to find ancient customs in old families. This payment, like others, was, for want of money, made anciently in the produce of the land. Macquarry was used to demand a sheep, for which he now takes a crown, by that inattention to the uncertain proportion between tween the value and the denomination of money, which has brought much diforder into Europe. A fheep has always the fame power of fupplying human wants, but a crown will bring at one time more, at another lefs.

Ulva was not neglected by the piety of ancient times: it has ftill to fhow what was once a church.

INCH KENNETH.

In the morning we went again into the boat, and were landed on Inch Kenneth, an Ifland about a mile long, and perhaps half a mile broad, remarkable for pleafantnefs and fertility. It is verdant and graffy, and fit both for pafture and tillage; but it has no trees. Its only inhabitants were Sir Allan Maclean, and two young ladies, his daughters, with their fervants.

Romance

Romance does not often exhibit a scene that firikes the imagination more than this little defert in these depths of Western obscurity, occupied not by a gross herdsman, or amphibious fisherman, but by a gentleman and two ladies, of high birth, polished manners, and elegant 'conversation, who, in a habitation raised not very far above the ground, but furnished with unexpected neatness and convenience, practifed all the kindness of hospitality, and refinement of courtefy.

Sir Allan is the Chieftain of the great Clan of Maclean, which is faid to claim the fecond place among the Highland families, yielding only to Macdonald. Though by the mifconduct of his anceftors, most of the extensive territory, which would have defcended to him, has been alienated, he still retains much of the dignity and authority of his birth. When foldiers were lately wanting for the American war, application was was made to Sir Allan, and he nominated a hundred men for the fervice, who obeyed the fummons, and bore arms under his command.

He had then, for fome time, refided with the young ladies in Inch Kenneth, where he lives not only with plenty, but with elegance, having conveyed to his cottage a collection of books, and what elfe is neceffary to make his hours pleafant.

When we landed, we were met by Sir Allan and the ladies, accompanied by Mils Macquarry, who had paffed fome time with them, and now returned to Ulva with her father.

We all walked together to the mansion, where we found one cottage for Sir Allan, and I think two more for the domesticks and the offices. We entered, and wanted little that palaces afford. Our room was 11 neatly WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 335 neatly floored, and well lighted; and our dinner, which was dreffed in one of the other huts, was plentiful and delicate.

In the afternoon Sir Allan reminded us, that the day was Sunday, which he never fuffered to pass without some religious diftinction, and invited us to partake in his acts of domeflick worship; which I hope neither Mr. Boswell nor myself will be sufpected of a disposition to refuse. The elder of the ladies read the English fervice.

Inch Kenneth was once a feminary of ecclefiafticks, fubordinate, I fuppofe, to Icolmkill. Sir Allan had a mind to trace the foundation of the college, but neither I nor Mr. Bofwell, who bends a keener eye on vacancy, were able to perceive them.

Our attention, however, was fufficiently engaged by a venerable chapel, which ftands yet entire, except that the roof is gone.

gone. It is about fixty feet in length, and thirty in breadth. On one fide of the altar is a bas relief of the bleffed Virgin, and by it lies a little bell; which, though cracked, and without a clapper, has remained there for ages, guarded only by the venerablenefs of the place. The ground round the chapel is covered with grave-flones of Chiefs and ladies; and ftill continues to be a place of fepulture.

Inch Kenneth is a proper prelude to Icolmkill. It was not without fome mournful emotion that we contemplated the ruins of religious ftructures, and the monuments of the dead.

On the next day we took a more diffinct view of the place, and went with the boat to fee oyfters in the bed, out of which the boat-men forced up as many as were wanted. Even Inch Kenneth has a fubordinate Ifland, named Sandiland, I fuppofe, in in contempt, where we landed, and found a rock, with a furface of perhaps four acres, of which one is naked ftone, another fpread with fand and fhells, fome of which I picked up for their gloffy beauty, and two covered with a little earth and grafs, on which Sir Allan has a few fheep. I doubt not but when there was a college at Inch Kenneth, there was a hermitage upon Sandiland.

Having wandered over those extensive plains, we committed ourselves again to the winds and waters; and after a voyage of about ten minutes, in which we met with nothing very observable, were again safe upon dry ground.

We told Sir Allan our defire of vifiting Icolmkill, and entreated him to give up his protection, and his company. He thought proper 40 hefitate a little; but the Ladies hinted, that as they knew he would not Z finally finally refuse, he would do better if he preferved the grace of ready compliance. He took their advice, and promised to carry us on the morrow in his boat.

We passed the remaining part of the day in fuch amusements as were in our power. Sir Allan related the American campaign, and at evening one of the Ladies played on her harpfichord, while Col and Mr. Bofwell danced a Scottish reel with the other.

We could have been eafily perfuaded to a longer flay upon Inch Kenneth, but life will not be all paffed in delight. The feffion at Edinburgh was approaching, from which Mr. Bofwell could not be abfent.

In the morning our boat was ready: it was high and ftrong. Sir Allan victualled it for the day, and provided able rowers. We now parted from the young Laird of Col, who had treated us with fo much kindnefs, nefs, and concluded his favours by configning us to Sir Allan. Here we had the laft embrace of this amiable man, who, while thefe pages were preparing to atteft his virtues, perifhed in the paffage between Ulva and Inch Kenneth.

Sir Allan, to whom the whole region was well known, told us of a very remarkable cave, to which he would fhow us the way. We had been difappointed already by one cave, and were not much elevated by the expectation of another.

It was yet better to fee it, and we ftopped at fome rocks on the coaft of Mull. The mouth is fortified by vaft fragments of ftone, over which we made our way, neither very nimbly, nor very fecurely. The place, however, well repaid our trouble. The bottom, as far as the flood rufhes in, was encumbered with large pebbles, but as Z_2 we

we advanced was fpread over with fmooth fand. The breadth is about forty-five feet: the roof rifes in an arch, almost regular, to a height which we could not measure; but I think it about thirty feet.

This part of our curiofity was nearly fruftrated; for though we went to fee a cave, and knew that caves are dark, we forgot to carry tapers, and did not discover our omifion till we were wakened by our wants. Sir Allan then fent one of the boatmen into the country, who foon returned with one little candle. We were thus enabled to go forward, but could not venture far. Having paffed inward from the fea to' a great depth, we found on the right hand a narrow passage, perhaps not more than fix feet wide, obstructed by great stones, over which we climbed and came into a fecond cave, in breadth twenty-five feet. The air in this apartment was very warm, but not oppreffive, nor loaded with vapours. Our WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 341 Our light fhowed no tokens of a feculent or corrupted atmosphere. Here was a square stone, called, as we are told, Fin-gal's Table.

If we had been provided with torches, we should have proceeded in our search, though we had already gone as far as any former adventurer, except some who are reported never to have returned; and, measuring our way back, we found it more than a hundred and fixty yards, the eleventh part of a mile.

Our measures were not critically exact, having been made with a walking pole, such as it is convenient to carry in these rocky countries, of which I guessed the length by standing against it. In this there could be no great errour, nor do I much doubt but the Highlander, whom we employed, reported the number right. More nicety however is better, and no man should tra-Z 3 vel vel unprovided with inftruments for taking heights and diffances.

There is yet another caufe of errour not always eafily furmounted, though more dangerous to the veracity of itinerary narratives, than imperfect menfuration. An obferver deeply imprefied by any remarkable fpectacle, does not fuppofe, that the traces will foon vanish from his mind, and having commonly no great convenience for writing, defers the defcription to a time of more leifure, and better accommodation.

He who has not made the experiment, or who is not accuftomed to require rigorous accuracy from himfelf, will fcarcely believe how much a few hours take from certainty of knowledge, and diffinctnefs of imagery; how the fucceffion of objects will be broken, how feparate parts will be confused, and how many particular features and and difcriminations will be comprefied and conglobated into one grofs and general idea.

To this dilatory notation muft be imputed the falle relations of travellers, where there is no imaginable motive to deceive. They trufted to memory what cannot be trufted fafely but to the eye, and told by guels what a few hours before they had known with certainty. Thus it was that Wheeler and Spen defcribed with irreconcilable contrariety things which they furveyed together, and which both undoubtedly defigned to fhow as they faw.

When we had fatisfied our curiofity in the cave, fo far as our penury of light permitted us, we clambered again to our boats, and proceeded along the coaft of Mull to a headland, called Atun, remarkable for the Z 4 columnar columnar form of the rocks, which rife in a feries of pilasters, with a degree of regularity, which Sir Allan thinks not less worthy of curiosity than the shore of Staffa.

Not long after we came to another range of black rocks, which had the appearance of broken pilafters, fet one behind another to a great depth. This place was chofen by Sir Allan for our dinner. We were eafily accommodated with feats, for the ftones were of all heights, and refreshed ourfelves and our boatmen, who could have no other reft till we were at frolmkill.

The evening was now approaching, and we were yet at a confiderable diffance from the end of our expedition. We could therefore flop no more to make remarks in the way, but fet forward with fome degree of of eagerness. The day soon failed us, and the moon prefented a very folemn and pleafing scene. The sky was clear, so that the eye commanded a wide circle: the fea was neither still nor turbulent: the wind neither filent nor loud. We were never far from one coaft or another, on which, if the weather had become violent, we could have found shelter, and therefore contemplated at ease the region through which we glided in the tranquillity of the night, and faw now a rock and now an ifland grow gradually confpicuous and gradually obfcure. I committed the fault which I have just been centuring, in neglecting, as we passed, to note the feries of this placid navigation.

We were very near an Island, called Nun's Island, perhaps from an ancient convent. Here is faid to have been dug the ftone which was used in the buildings of Icolmkill.

Icalmkill. Whether it is now inhabited we could not flay to inquire.

ı

At last we came to Icolmkill, but found no convenience for landing. Our boat could not be forced very near the dry ground, and our Highlanders carried us over the water.

We were now treading that illustrious Island, which was once the luminary of the Caledonian regions, whence favage Clans and roving barbarians derived the benefits of knowledge, and the bleffings of religion. To abstract the mind from all local emotion would be impossible, if it were endeavoured, and would be foolifh, if it were possible. Whatever withdraws us from the power of our fenses; whatever makes the pass, the distant, or the future predominate over the present, advances us in the dignity of thinking beings. Far from me and from my friends, friends, be fuch frigid philosophy as may conduct us indifferent and unmoved over any ground which has been dignified by wisdom, bravery, or virtue. That man is little to be envied, whose patriotism would not gain force upon the plain of Marathon, or whose piety would not grow warmer among the ruins of Iona.

We came too late to visit monuments: fome care was neceffary for ourselves. Whatever was in the Island, Sir Allan could demand, for the inhabitants were Macleans; but having little they could not give us much. He went to the headman of the Island, whom Fame, but Fame delights in amplifying, represents as worth no less than fifty pounds. He was perhaps proud enough of his guests, but ill prepared for our entertainment; however, he foon produced more provision than men not luxurious require. Our lodging was next to be provided. We found a barn well ftocked focked with hay, and made our beds as foft as we could.

In the morning we role and furveyed the place. The churches of the two convents are both ftanding, though unroofed. They were built of unhewn ftone, but folid, and not inelegant. I brought away rude measures of the buildings, fuch as I cannot much truft myself, inaccurately taken, and obscurely noted. Mr. Pennant's delineations, which are doubtles exact, have made my unskilful description less neceffary.

The epifcopal church confifts of two parts, feparated by the belfry, and built at different times. The original church had, like others, the altar at one end, and tower at the other; but as it grew too fmall, another building of equal dimension was added, and the tower then was necessfarily in the middle.

That

· Digitized by Google

That these edifices are of different ages feems evident. The arch of the first church is Roman, being part of a circle; that of the additional building is pointed, and therefore Gotbick, or Saracenical; the tower is firm, and wants only to be floored and covered.

Of the chambers or cells belonging to the monks, there are fome walls remaining, but nothing approaching to a complete apartment.

The bottom of the church is fo incumbered with mud and rubbifh, that we could make no difcoveries of curious inferiptions, and what there are have been already publifhed. The place is faid to be known where the black ftones lie concealed, on which the old Highland Chiefs, when they made contracts and alliances, ufed to take the oath, which was confidered as more facred than any other obligation, and which could could not be violated without the blackeft infamy. In those days of violence and rapine, it was of great importance to impress upon favage minds the fanctity of an oath, by some particular and extraordinary circumstances. They would not have recourse to the black stones, upon small or common occasions, and when they had established their faith by this tremendous fanction, inconstancy and treachery were no longer feared.

The chapel of the nunnery is now used by the inhabitants as a kind of general cow-house, and the bottom is consequently too miry for examination. Some of the stones which covered the later abbestes have inferiptions, which might yet be read, if the chapel were cleansed. The roof of this, as of all the other buildings, is totally destroyed, not only because timber quickly decays when it is neglected, but because in an island utterly destitute of wood, it it was wanted for use, and was confequently the first plunder of needy rapacity.

The chancel of the nuns' chapel is covered with an arch of ftone, to which time has done no injury; and a fmall apartment communicating with the choir, on the north fide, like the chapter-house int cathedrals, roofed with stone in the fame manner, is likewise entire.

In one of the churches was a marble altar, which the fuperfition of the inhabitants has deftroyed. Their opinion was, that a fragment of this ftone was a defence against fhipwrecks, fire, and miscarriages. In one corner of the church the bason for holy water is yet unbroken.

The cemetry of the nunnery was, till very lately, regarded with fuch reverence, that only women were buried in it. These reliques of veneration always produce fome mournful mournful pleafure. I could have forgivent a great injury more easily than the violation of this imaginary fanctity.

South of the chapel fland the walls of a large room, which was probably the hall, or refectory of the nunnery. This apartment is capable of repair. Of the reft of the convent there are only fragments.

Befides the two principal churches, there are, I think, five chapels yet flanding, and three more remembered. There are alfo croffes, of which two bear the names of St. John and St. Matthew.

A large fpace of ground about these confecrated edifices is covered with graveftones, few of which have any inscription. He that surveys it, attended by an insular antiquary, may be told where the Kings of many nations are buried, and if he loves to sooth his imagination with the 13 thoughts thoughts that naturally rife in places where the great and the powerful lie mingled with the dust, let him listen in submissive filence; for if he asks any questions, this delight is at an end.

Iona has long enjoyed, without any very credible atteflation, the honour of being reputed the cemetery of the Scotti/b Kings. It is not unlikely, that, when the opinion of local fanctity was prevalent, the Chieftains of the Ifles, and perhaps fome of the Norwegian or Iri/b princes, were reposited in this venerable enclosure. But by whom the fubterraneous vaults are peopled is now utterly unknown. The graves are very numerous, and fome of them undoubtedly contain the remains of men, who did not expect to be fo foon forgotten.

Not far from this awful ground, may be traced the garden of the monaftery: the fifhponds are yet difcernible, and the A a aqueduct, aqueduct, which supplied them, is still in use.

There remains a broken building, which is called the Bifhop's houfe, I know not by what authority. It was once the refidence of fome man above the common rank, for it has two flories and a chimney. We were fhewn a chimney at the other end, which was only a nich, without perforation, but fo much does antiquarian credulity, or patriotick vanity prevail, that it was not much more fafe to truft the eye of our inftructor than the memory.

There is in the Island one house more, and only one, that has a chimney; we entered it, and found it neither wanting repair nor inhabitants; but to the farmers, who now posses it, the chimney is of no great value; for their fire was made on the floor, in the middle of the room, and notwithstanding the dignity of their mansion, they they rejoiced, like their neighbours, in the comforts of Imoke.

It is observed, that ecclessifical colleges are always in the most pleasant and fruitful places. While the world allowed the monks their choice, it is furely no dishonour that they chose well. This Island is remarkably fruitful. The village near the churches is faid to contain seventy families, which, at five in a family, is more than a hundred inhabitants to a mile. There are perhaps other villages; yet both corn and cattle are annually exported.

But the fruitfulness of Iona is now its whole prosperity. The inhabitants are remarkably gross, and remarkably neglected: I know not if they are visited by any Minister. The Island, which was once the metropolis of learning and piety, has now no school for education, nor temple for A a 2 worship, worship, only two inhabitants that can speak English, and not one that can write or read.

The people are of the Clan of Maclean; and though Sir Allan had not been in the place for many years, he was received with all the reverence due to their Chieftain. One of them being fharply reprehended by him, for not fending him fome rum, declared after his departure, in Mr. Bofwell's prefence, that he had no defign of difappointing him, for, faid he, I would cut my bones for bim; and if he had fent bis dog for it, be fhould have had it.

When we were to depart, our boat was left by the ebb at a great diftance from the water, but no fooner did we wifh it afloat, than the iflanders gathered round it, and, by the union of many hands, pufhed it down the beach; every man who could 2 contribute contribute his help feemed to think himfelf happy in the opportunity of being, for a moment, ufeful to his Chief.

We now left those illustrious ruins, by which Mr. Bofwell was much affected, nor would I willingly be thought to have looked upon them without some emotion. Perhaps, in the revolutions of the world, Iona may be sometime again the instructures of the Western Regions.

It was no long voyage to Mull, where, under Sir Allan's protection, we landed in the evening, and were entertained for the night by Mr. Maclean, a Minister that lives upon the coast, whose elegance of converfation, and strength of judgment, would make him confpicuous in places of greater celebrity. Next day we dined with Dr. Maclean, another physician, and then travelled on to the house of a very powerful A a 3 Laird, Laird, Maclean of Lochbuy; for in this country every man's name is Maclean.

Where races are thus numerous, and thus combined, none but the Chief of a clan is addreffed by his name. The Laird of Dunvegan is called Macleod, but other gentlemen of the fame family are denominated by the places where they refide, as Raafa, or Talifker. The diftinction of the meaner people is made by their Chriftian names. In confequence of this practice, the late Laird of Macfarlane, an eminent genealogift, confidered himfelf as difrefpectfully treated, if the common addition was applied to him. Mr. Macfarlane, faid he, may with equal propriety be faid to many; but I, and I only, am Macfarlane.

Our afternoon journey was through a country of fuch gloomy defolation, that Mr. Bofwell thought no part of the Highlands equally terrifick, yet we came without out any difficulty, at evening, to Lochbuy, where we found a true Highland Laird, rough and haughty, and tenacious of his dignity; who, hearing my name, inquired whether I was of the Johnstons of Glencoe, or of Ardnamurchan?

Lochbuy has, like the other infular Chieftains, quitted the caftle that fheltered his anceftors, and lives near it, in a manfion not very fpacious or fplendid. I have feen no houfes in the Iflands much to be envied for convenience or magnificence, yet they bear teftimony to the progrefs of arts and civility, as they fhew that rapine and furprife are no longer dreaded, and are much more commodious than the ancient fortreffes.

The caftles of the Hebrides, many of which are ftanding, and many ruined, were always built upon points of land, on the margin of the fea. For the choice of A a 4 this this fituation there must have been fome general reason, which the change of manners has left in obscurity. They were of no use in the days of piracy, as defences of the coast; for it was equally accessible in other places. Had they been fea-marks or light-houses, they would have been of more use to the invader than the natives, who could want no such directions on their own waters: for a watch-tower, a cottage on a hill would have been better, as it would have commanded a wider view.

If they be confidered merely as places of retreat, the fituation feems not well chofen; for the Laird of an Ifland is fafeft from foreign enemies in the centre: on the coaft he might be more fuddenly furprifed than in the inland parts; and the invaders, if their enterprife mifcarried, might more eafily retreat. Some convenience, however, whatever it was, their pofition on the fhore afforded; for uniformity of practice

WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 361 tice feldom continues long without good reason.

A caftle in the Islands is only a fingle tower of three or four flories, of which the walls are fometimes eight or nine feet thick, with narrow windows, and close winding stairs of stone. The top rifes in a cone, or pyramid of stone, encompassed -by battlements. The intermediate floors are fometimes frames of timber, as in common houses, and sometimes arches of stone. or alternately ftone and timber; fo that there was very little danger from fire. In the centre of every floor, from top to bottom, is the chief room, of no great extent, round which there are narrow cavities, or receffes, formed by fmall vacuities, or by a double wall. I know not whether there be ever more than one fire-place. They had not capacity to contain many people, or much provision; but their enemies could feldom ftay to blockade them; for for if they failed in the first attack, their next care was to escape.

The walls were always too ftrong to be fhaken by fuch defultory hoftilities; the windows were too narrow to be entered, and the battlements too high to be fcaled. The only danger was at the gates, over which the wall was built with a fquare cavity, not unlike a chimney, continued to the top. Through this hollow the defendants let fall ftones upon those who attempted to break the gate, and poured down water, perhaps fcalding water, if the attack was made with fire. The cafile of Lochbuy was fecured by double doors, of which the outer was an iron grate.

In every caftle is a well and a dungeon. The ufe of the well is evident. The dungeon is a deep fubterraneous cavity, walled on the fides, and arched on the top, into which the defcent is through a narrow door, by

by a ladder or a rope, fo that it feems impoffible to efcape, when the rope or ladder is drawn up. The dungeon was, I fuppofe, in war, a prifon for fuch captives as were treated with feverity, and, in peace, for fuch delinquents as had committed crimes within the Laird's jurifdiction; for the manfions of many Lairds were, till the late privation of their privileges, the halls of juffice to their own tenants,

As these fortifications were the productions of mere necessfity, they are built only for fafety, with little regard to convenience, and with none to elegance or pleasure. It was fufficient for a Laird of the Hebrides, if he had a strong house, in which he could hide his wife and children from the next Clan. That they are not large nor splendid, is no wonder. It is not easy to find how they are raised, such as they are, by men who had no money, in countries where the labourers and artificers could scarcely be fed. The

The buildings in different parts of the Islands shew their degrees of wealth and power. I believe that for all the castles which I have seen beyond the Tweed, the ruins yet remaining of some one of these which the English built in Wales, would supply materials.

These castles afford another evidence that the fictions of romantic chivalry had for their basis the real manners of the feudal times, when every Lord of a feignory lived in his hold lawlefs and unaccountable, with all the licentioufnefs and infolence of uncontested superiority and unprincipled power. The traveller, whoever he might be, coming to the fortified habitation of a Chieftain, would, probably, have been interrogated from the battlements, admitted with caution at the gate, introduced to a petty Monarch, fierce with habitual hoftility, and vigilant with ignorant fuspicion; who, according to his general temper, or accidental

WESTERN ISLANDS, &c. 365 accidental humour, would have feated a ftranger as his guest at the table, or as a fpy confined him in the dungeon.

Lochbuy means the Yellow Lake, which is the name given to an inlet of the fea, upon which the caftle of Mr. Maclean flands. The reason of the appellation we did not learn.

We were now to leave the Hebrides, where we had fpent fome weeks with fufficient amufement, and where we had amplified our thoughts with new fcenes of nature, and new modes of life. More time would have given us a more diftinct view, but it was neceffary that Mr. Bofwell fhould return before the courts of juftice were opened; and it was not proper to live too long upon hofpitality, however liberally imparted.

Of these islands it must be confessed, that they have not many allurements, but to the the mere lover of naked nature. The inhabitants are thin, provisions are fcarce, and defolation and penury give little pleasure.

The people collectively confidered are not few, though their numbers are fmall in proportion to the fpace which they occupy. Mull is faid to contain fix thoufand, and Sky fifteen thoufand. Of the computation refpecting Mull, I can give no account; but when I doubted the truth of the numbers attributed to Sky, one of the Minifters exhibited fuch facts as conquered my incredulity.

Of the proportion, which the product of any region bears to the people, an estimate is commonly made according to the pecuniary price of the necessaries of life; a principle of judgment which is never certain, because it supposes what is far from truth, that the value of money is always the

the fame, and fo measures an unknown quantity by an uncertain standard. It is competent enough when the markets of the fame country, at different times, and those times not too distant, are to be compared; but of very little use for the purpose of making one nation acquainted with the state of another. Provisions, though plentiful, are fold in places of great pecuniary opulence for nominal prices, to which, however scarce, where gold and silver are yet scarcer, they can never be raised.

In the Western Islands there is so little internal commerce, that hardly any thing has' a known or settled rate. The price of things brought in, or carried out, is to be considered as that of a foreign market; and even this there is some difficulty in discovering, because their denominations of quantity are different from ours; and when there is ignorance on both fides, no appeal can be made to a common measure.

This,

This, however, is not the only impediment. The Scots, with a vigilance of jealoufy which never goes to fleep, always fuspect that an Englishman despises them for their poverty, and to convince him that they are not lefs rich than their neighboars, are fure to tell him a price higher than the true. When Lefley, two hundred years ago, related fo punctilioufly, that a hundred hen eggs, new laid, were fold in the Islands for a penny, he supposed that no inference could poffibly follow, but that eggs were in great abundance. Posterity has fince grown wifer; and having learned, that nominal and real value may differ, they now tell no fuch ftories, left the foreigner should happen to collect, not that eggs are many, but that pence are few.

Money and wealth have by the use of commercial language been so long confounded, that they are commonly supposed to be the same; and this prejudice has spread fpread fo widely in Scotland, that I know not whether I found man or woman, whom I interrogated concerning payments of money, that could furmount the illiberal defire of deceiving me, by reprefenting every thing as dearer than it is.

From Lochbuy we rode a very few miles to the fide of Mull, which faces Scotland, where, having taken leave of our kind protector, Sir Allan, we embarked in a boat, in which the feat provided for our accommodation was a heap of rough brufhwood; and on the twenty-fecond of October reposed at a tolerable inn on the main land.

On the next day we began our journey fouthwards. The weather was tempeftuous. For half the day the ground was rough, and our horfes were ftill fmall. Had they required much reftraint, we might have been reduced to difficulties; for I think we had amongft us but one bridle. B b We

We fed the poor animals liberally, and they performed their journey well. In the latter part of the day, we came to a firm and fmooth road, made by the foldiers, on which we travelled with great fecurity, bufied with contemplating the fcene about us. The night came on while we had yet a great part of the way to go, though not fo dark but that we could difcern the cataracts which poured down the hills on one fide, and fell into one general channel that ran with great violence on the other. The wind was loud, the rain was heavy, and the whiftling of the blaft, the fall of the shower, the rush of the cataracts, and the roar of the torrent, made a nobler chorus of the rough music of nature, than it had ever been my chance to hear before. The fireams, which ran crofs the way from. the hills to the main current, were fo frequent, that after a while I began to count them; and, in ten miles, reckoned fiftyfive, probably milling fome, and having let 12

let fome pafs before they forced themfelves upon my notice. At laft we came to Inverary, where we found an inn, not only commodious, but magnificent.

The difficulties of peregrination were now at an end. Mr. Bofwell had the honour of being known to the Duke of Argyle, by whom we were very kindly entertained at his splendid feat, and supplied with conveniences for surveying his spacious park and rising forests.

After two days ftay at Inverary we proceeded fouthward over Glencoe, a black and dreary region, now made eafily paffable by a military road, which rifes from either end of the glen, by an acclivity not dangeroufly fteep, but fufficiently laborious. In the middle, at the top of the hill, is a feat with this infcription, Reft, and be thankful. Stones were placed to mark the diffances, which the inhabitants have taken away, refolved, they faid, to have no new miles.

In this rainy feafon the hills ftreamed with waterfalls, which, croffing the way, formed currents on the other fide, that ran in contrary directions as they fell to the north or fouth of the fummit. Being, by the favour of the Duke, well mounted, I went up and down the hill with great convenience.

From Glencoe we paffed through a pleafant country to the banks of Loch Lomond, and were received at the houfe of Sir James Colquinoun, who is owner of almost all the thirty islands of the Loch, which we went in a boat next morning to furvey. The heaviness of the rain shortened our voyage, but we landed on one island planted with yew, and stocked with deer, and on another containing perhaps not more than half an acre, remarkable for the ruins ruins of an old caftle, on which the ofprey builds her annual neft. Had Loch Lomond been in a happier climate, it would have been the boaft of wealth and vanity to own one of the little fpots which it inclofes, and to have employed upon it all the arts of embellifhment. But as it is, the iflets, which court the gazer at a diftance, difguft him at his approach, when he finds, inftead of foft lawns and fhady thickets, nothing more than uncultivated ruggednefs.

Where the Loch difcharges itfelf into a river, called the Leven, we paffed a night with Mr. Smollet, a relation of Doctor Smollet, to whofe memory he has raifed an obelifk on the bank near the houfe in which he was born. The civility and refpect which we found at every place, it is ungrateful to omit, and tedious to repeat. Here we were met by a post-chaife, that conveyed us to Glafgow.

To

To defcribe a city fo much frequented as Glafgow, is unneceffary. The profperity of its commerce appears by the greatnefs of many private houfes, and a general appearance of wealth. It is the only epifcopal city whofe cathedral was left flanding in the rage of Reformation. It is now divided into many feparate places of worfhip, which, taken all together, compofe a great pile, that had been fome centuries in building, but was never finished; for the change of religion intercepted its progress, before the cross isle was added, which feems effential to a Gothick cathedral.

The college has not had a fufficient fhare of the increasing magnificence of the place. The feffion was begun; for it commences on the tenth of October, and continues to the tenth of June; but the fludents appeared not numerous, being, I suppose, not yet returned from their several homes. The division of the academical year into one feffion, feffion, and one receis, feems to me better accommodated to the prefent flate of life, than that variegation of time by terms and vacations derived from diffant centuries, in which it was probably convenient, and flill continued in the English univerfities. So many folid months as the Scotch fcheme of education joins together, allow and encourage a plan for each part of the year; but with us, he that has fettled himfelf to fludy in the college is foon tempted into the country, and he that has adjufted his life in the country, is fummoned back to his college.

Yet when I have allowed to the univerfities of Scotland a more rational diffribution of time, I have given them, fo far as my inquiries have informed me, all that they can claim. The fludents, for the moft part, go thither boys, and depart before they are men; they carry with them little fundamental knowledge, and therefore the B b 4 fuperfuperstructure cannot be lofty. The grammar schools are not generally well supplied; for the character of a school-master being there less honourable than in England, is feldom accepted by men who are capable to adorn it, and where the school has been deficient, the college can effect little.

Men bred in the univerfities of Scotland cannot be expected to be often decorated with the fplendours of ornamental erudition, but they obtain a mediocrity of knowledge, between learning and ignorance, not inadequate to the purpofes of common life, which is, I believe, very widely diffufed among them, and which countenanced in general by a national combination fo invidious, that their friends cannot defend it, and actuated in particulars by a fpirit of enterprife, fo vigorous, that their enemies are conftrained to praife it, enables them to find, or to make their way to employment, riches, and diffunction.

From

From Glafgow we directed our courfe to Auchinleck, an eftate devolved, through a long feries of anceftors, to Mr. Bofuell's father, the prefent poffeffor. In our way we found feveral places remarkable enough in themfelves, but already defcribed by thofe who viewed them at more leifure, or with much more fkill; and ftopped two days at Mr. Campbell's, a gentleman married to Mr. Bofwell's fifter.

Auchinleck, which fignifies a flony field, feems not now to have any particular claim to its denomination. It is a diffrict generally level, and fufficiently fertile, but like all the Western fide of Scotland, incommoded by very frequent rain. It was, with the reft of the country, generally naked, till the prefent poffeffor finding, by the growth of fome flately trees near his old caftle, that the ground was favourable enough to timber, adorned it very diligently with annual plantations.

Lord Auchinleck, who is one of the Judges of Scotland, and therefore not wholly at leifure for domeflick bufinefs or pleafure, has yet found time to make improvements in his patrimony. He has built a houfe of hewn flone, very flately and durable, and has advanced the value of his lands with great tendernefs to his tenants.

I was, however, lefs delighted with the elegance of the modern manfion, than with the fullen dignity of the old caftle. I clambered with Mr. Bofwell among the ruins, which afford ftriking images of ancient life. It is, like other caftles, built upon a point of rock, and was, I believe, anciently furrounded with a moat. There is another rock near it, to which the drawbridge, when it was let down, is faid to have reached. Here, in the ages of tumult and rapine, the Laird was furprifed and killed by the neighbouring Chief, who perhaps perhaps might have extinguished the family, had he not in a few days been feized and hanged, together with his fons, by Douglas, who came with his forces to the relief of Auchinleck.

At no great diftance from the houfe runs a pleafing brook, by a red rock, out of which has been hewn a very agreeable and commodious fummer-houfe, at lefs expence, as Lord Anchinleck told me, than would have been required to build a room of the fame dimensions. The rock seems to have no more dampness than any other wall. Such opportunities of variety it is judicious not to neglect.

We now returned to Exinburgh, where I paffed fome days with men of learning, whose names want no advancement from my commemoration, or with women of elegance, which perhaps disclaims a pedant's praise.

The conversation of the Scots grows every day lefs unpleafing to the English; their peculiarities wear fast away; their dialect is likely to become in half a century provincial and rustick, even to themselves. The great, the learned, the ambitious, and the vain, all cultivate the English phrase, and the English pronunciation, and in splendid companies Scotch is not much heard, except now and then from an old Lady.

There is one fubject of philosophical curiosity to be found in Eainburgb, which no other city has to shew; a college of the deaf and dumb, who are taught to speak, to read, to write, and to practife arithmetick, by a gentleman, whose name is Braidwood. The number which attends him is, I think, about twelve, which he brings together into a little school, and instructs according to their several degrees of proficiency.

I do

I do not mean to mention the inftruction of the deaf as new. Having been first practifed upon the fon of a conftable of Spain, it was afterwards cultivated with much emulation in England, by Wallis and Holder. and was lately professed by Mr. Baker. who once flattered me with hopes of feeing his method published. How far any former teachers have fucceeded, it is not eafy to know; the improvement of Mr. Braidwood's pupils is wonderful. They not only fpeak, write, and understand what is written, but if he that speaks looks towards them, and modifies his organs by diffinct and full utterance, they know fo well what is spoken, that it is an expression scarcely figurative to fay, they hear with the eye. That any have attained to the power mentioned by Burnet, of feeling founds, by laying a hand on the fpeaker's mouth, I know not; but I have feen fo much, that I can believe more; a fingle word, or a fhort fentence, I think, may poffibly be fo diffinguished.

It will readily be fuppofed by those that confider this fubject, that Mr. Braidwood's fcholars spell accurately. Orthography is vitiated among such as learn first to speak, and then to write, by imperfect notions of the relation between letters and vocal utterance; but to those students every character is of equal importance; for letters are to them not symbols of names, but of things; when they write they do not represent a found, but delineate a form.

This fchool I vifited, and found fome of the fcholars waiting for their mafter, whom they are faid to receive at his entrance with fmiling countenances and fparkling eyes, delighted with the hope of new ideas. One of the young Ladies had her flate before her, on which I wrote a queftion confifting of three figures, to be multiplied by two figures. She looked upon it, and quivering her fingers in a manner which I thought very pretty, but of which I know not whether ther it was art or play, multiplied the fum regularly in two lines, obferving the decimal place; but did not add the two lines together, probably difdaining fo eafy an operation. I pointed at the place where the fum total fhould ftand, and the noted it with fuch expedition as feemed to fhew that fhe had it only to write.

It was pleafing to fee one of the moft desperate of human calamities capable of fo much help: whatever enlarges hope, will exalt courage; after having feen the deaf taught arithmetick, who would be afraid to cultivate the Hebrides?

Such are the things which this journey has given me an opportunity of feeing, and fuch are the reflections which that fight has raifed. Having paffed my time almost wholly in cities, I may have been furprifed by modes of life and appearances of nature, that are familiar to men of wider wider furvey and more varied conversation. Novelty and ignorance must always be reciprocal, and I cannot but be conficious that my thoughts on national manners, are the thoughts of one who has feen but little.
